AN OBSERVER'S THOUGHTS.
COMMENTS AND OPINIONS IN TYPE.
What He Sees, Hears, Thinks and Imagines.

"There is one thing," says a New York gentleman, visiting in the city, to the Observer the other day "which I think militates against Lincoln's presenting a metropolitan appearance, that is the width of your streets. Why, a three-story building in New York looms up in her narrow streets, as imposing as a five or six story block here. But I must confess, after all, that I like to see a roadway or street of a good width, and all yours in Lincoln are models that way. To a person driving through them it gives an inexplicable feeling of freedom, just like one feels who gets away from close confinement in an office and gets a glimpse of nature's beauties. Lincoln is a surprise to me though my impressions of the west, just like those of hundreds of other easterners, were rather vague. I had something of an idea that I should run across a frolicsome cowboy at every turn, and came fully prepared to sell my life dearly. Yours is a beautiful little city, however, with a bustling, busy appearance, and I am agreeably disappointed."

Mr. J. D. Calhoun discussed the question of "The Editorial Staff to the Counting Room," at the meeting of the Press Club Wednesday. It was an able and instructive address, and was listened to with much attention. Calhoun took the strong ground that there was no such paper as the purely independent one, that every newspaper's work was to a more or less extent, dictated from the counting room. There have been very few newspapers conducted purely independent of what effect its sayings or doings would have on the business end of the paper, and those few are either dead or dying. Mr. Calhoun is amply fortified by his years of experience in news paper work to give a just and correct opinion on the subject. Mr. O. A. Mullen has been invited to speak on "English Newspapers" on Wednesday evening, July 18, and Mr. H. D. Hathaway, Wednesday evening, August 15th, on "Economic of Early Newspaper Work in Nebraska." These sessions of the press club are extremely interesting, and associate members are requested to remember the dates and be present if possible.

Have you ever noticed the number of good waltzers in Lincoln? Within the last four years, (since Mr. Mahler has been visiting us) the tone of the dancing has increased wonderfully. I have often heard Mr. Mahler remark that, for a city of our size, they equal any other city; there is A. B. Smith, for instance; there is no more graceful waltzer anywhere, while close to his heels are "Deacon" Brown, J. R. Lemist, Frank Zehring, Will McArthur, Geo. Buchanan, Will Maxwell, Oscar Funke, C. R. Richter and many others. The one objection to their dancing, is that they hold their partners too far off. The ladies of Lincoln too, are beautiful dancers, and among the best, I have heard remarked Miss Bertie Burr, Mahel, Ashby, Mimmie L. Ita, Belle and Aileen Oakley, Lillie Potvin, Clara Funke, Mrs. Jansen and many others. Yet, what Lincoln society needs the most, and that which they dance the poorest of any city, is the square dancer, such as the Saratoga dancers, etc.

As it is a settled fact that the Democrat as the Democrat will soon be extinct, perhaps a sketch of its history might be interesting to our readers. The paper was founded in 1879 by Gen. V. Viquin, with office in second floor of the building on O street occupied by Chapman, the long and many others. A six-column folio, and did yeoman work for the handful of democrats then in Lincoln. The Democrat was sold in February, 1882, to Messrs. Watkins and Barnhart, who ran it for about a year when Barnhart's interest was purchased by Hon. A. J. Sawyer, Mr. Watkins doing the editorial work. In January, 1884, Gen. Viquin again purchased an interest and resumed editorial control, retaining that position until he was appointed consul to Baranquilla by President Cleveland, August 1, 1885. Mr. J. D. Calhoun, who won his spurs as a newspaper man as "Topics" of the Journal, purchased the establishment, fitting the paper with a new dress of type and making other improvements. The Democrat had had a tempestuous career prior to Calhoun's taking charge, but better days soon dawned. The democratic administration was making its power felt in Nebraska, the party increased in numbers, and just at this time the boom came, the city doubled in population, and new business houses sprang up. These have materially helped to make the Democrat the paper it has become, but hard work has accomplished the greater portion. I am sorry to see the Democrat expire, for that is about what it amounts to; but I understand others stand ready to start another in its place. The new paper will have an uphill fight, for the greater part of the prestige the Democrat has obtained will stay with the Call.
