SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

The Uniformed Rank of Knights of Pythias f Lincoln will attend the grand encampment in Milwaukee, and already have an expense fund well started. For the benefit of that fund a ball and exhibition were given at Bohanan hall Tuesday evening, and the affair proved to be a great financial as well as a social success. About a hundred couples took part in the grand march, and many others came in later. Good music was provided, and S. A. Warner made an efficient master of ceremonies. The interested knights were present in their handsome uniform. Refreshments were served in the gallery. The gayety continued well into the new day, but the dancing was interrupted about eleven o'clock for a drill by the following sixteen young la-dies under the direction of Capt. J. W. Percival: Misses Fanny Warner, Emma Maggard, Edith Warner, Nellie Dewey, Effie Brackon, Carrie Essert, Josie Hanson, Emma Shepherd, Jennie McIntyre, Nettie Kelley, Clara Shockey, Mary Kershaw, Emma Essert of a great number of friends, and Lena Warner. The young ladies made a very natty appearance in uniforms prepared for the occasion. All were in blue gowns with five bands of gold braid across the front of the waists. The latter were cut with short coat-tail back, each of which was ornamented with three gold bars and brass buttons. All wore K. P. fatigue caps and black silk mits. All carried handsome swords with russet belts. The young ladies looked stunning and captured the audience from the start. After several circles they executed the following evolutions: Greek cross, Latin cross, left in front, right in front, single triangle, right forward fours right, three break from the right and march to the left, circle by twos, threes, fours and platoons and right wheel by division. The exhibition closed with a sword drill with the young ladies drawn up in two lines. Almost very movement brought a round of applause ladies had barely half a dozen practice drills, Rank, as several members admitted. The 16th. young ladies had prepared a surprise for their drillmaster and before breaking ranks had themselves drawn up in company front, Col. Ed R. Sizer then stepped forward and presented Capt. Percival on behalf of the lalies with a handsome gold Uniformed Rank charm. The captain was taken off his guard, but acknowledged the kindness feelingly. great hit. The marriage of Mr. Haydn A. Myer and Miss Mattie E. Gillespie occurred Tuesday evening. It was a quiet home wedding at the esidence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gillespie, 310 South Tenth street. The nuptial ceremonies were conducted by Rev. Lewis Gregory, and the company comprised only relatives of the contracting parties. Cut flowers and other decorative effects lent the'r fragrance and beauty to the parlors. The ceremony was followed by a fine wedding supper, and the evening was rounded out with social intercourse appropriate to such a joyous occasion. Mr. and Mrs. Myer have a large circle of friends and received many substantial tokens of love and esteem. The bride was for a long time an assistant of Foreman & Crowe, which brought her in constant contact with the best known ladies of Lincoln. She held not only the esteem of her employers, but her skill and her charming manners won the warm regard of a host of patrons. The groom is the right bower of Mr. James O'Neil, the well known contracting plumber. Although a young man, he has applied himself to his business until he has acquired a thorough command. and he has made his services so valuable that he has been offered a partnership interest in the firm. He has a promising business career before him and lots of friends to congratulate im on his most recent good fortune. It Lies in New Hampshire, and is Stocaed with Wild Animals.

Mr. Austin Corbin has undertaken an enterprise unique in this country, but with plenty of precedents abroad, and particularly in England. For months his agents have been engaged in buying up adjacent mountain farms in the township of Newport, N. H., and consolidating them in one vast park. Already Mr. Corbin has become possessed of a compact tract of land containing 10,000 acres, and he intends ultimately to acquire as much more rocky and forest covered realty. Around this little principality al-

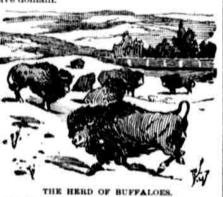

AUSTIN CORBIN'S HOUSE, ready obtained the owner has put a high strong fence, and within the barrier thus formed buffalo, moose, elk and the common deer roam at will, while the woodcock and partridge make their nests unscared. It is in a word a magnificent game preserve, on which the almost extinct buffalo is the most interesting feature. Mr. Corbin has sixteen fine specimens of the American bison, including a three months' old calf, and under the conditions surrounding them he hopes to see their tribe increase

The park includes the tract known as the Cornish mountain, and its chief value, aside from the range afforded to game, is the presence near the height of two large ponds fed by spring water. Mr. Corbin originally intended to locate his park on the Croydon mountain, but the farmers of that region held off too long, thinking to get a large price for their sterile acres. While they were holding off the millionaire invested elsewhere.

At the village of Northville, which is on the borders of the domain, Mr. Corbin has foundation of the former mansion is on a rise of ground gradually extending upward from the river, and the house can be seen for miles around when completed. The site chosen is that of the old Corbin homestead, a portion of which is still standing and will be preserved as an annex. Mrs. Edgeli's house will be located half a mile from her father's. Both will be ready for occupancy the coming sum-

Mr. Corbin's plan of game preservation involves, of course, the expenditure of a large sum of money, and besides the permanent outlay for land, animals and houses, there will be a constant outlay for keepers, care takers and laborers to prevent poaching and look after the varied interests of the exten-

Mr. Corbin, the owner of the park, had a queer experience recently at New York city. He imported a lot of wines from Europe for use in the summer residence among the hills When he claimed then a letter in reply stating that wines are some times stolen at the port of shipment, and the Erhardt adds that he has no doubt losses are often sustained at the latter place, and calls Mr. Corbin's attention to the difficulty under which the collector labors in the matter, one of which is that there are no trained detectives in charge of the public stores. Two were on duty there, but they lost their places, and the vacancies have not been filled. "The best of detectives," Mr. Echardt explains, "are often illiterate, but applicants for these places must pass an examination before appoint-
