POPULATION OF LINCOLN, 65,000.

A portrait of Horace Greeley forms the frontispiece of the Century for July to accompany a hitherto unpublished address by Mr. Greeley on Abraham Lincoln, which, coming after the Hay and Nicolay history, and Mr. Schurz's review of the same, will be read with particular interest, not lessened by the knowledge of the peculiar relations which existed between Lincoln and Greeley.

The New York of the Future and Journalists and Newsmanagers Again, the last being apropos of a paper in the Open Letter Department on "Conscience in Journalism," by Eugene M. Camp. A timely communication from Miss Eliza R. Scidmore treats of the disputed boundary between Alaska and British Columbia, and the basis of dispute in this growing question is further set forth by the aid of a map from recent authentic sources. Richard Hoffman makes a note of "Similar Musical Phrases in Great Composers."

CHILDREN AT THE SHORE

HOW THEY ENJOY THE SUMMER DAYS BY THE SEA.

Olive Harper Has Been Studying the Dress of the Little Ones at Various Warm Weather Atlantic Resorts—Pictures That Explain the Text.

[Special Correspondence.] NEW YORK, June 25.—Common sense would suggest plain dark blue flannel gowns and big shade hats and an entire absence of furbelow and fancy on children's dresses that are to be worn while playing at the seashore on the sands, but common sense and fashion do not always amalgamate, particularly at our fashionable resorts. In Newport the aim is to see whose children can make the most extravagant appearance, regardless of cost, and the result is that the little tots are dressed in white flannel, in velvet, silk and cashmeres as often as in more sensible material, and then turned loose to paddle in the edge of the water or dig holes in the sand.

STYLES IN NEWPORT.

While the dainty white picture gowns of muslin or surah that reach the ankle are worn at home the outdoor dresses are made quite short and the feet are encased in black silk stockings and undressed leather or canvas slippers, and they wade in the water with these, as it would be bad form for a little millionaire to go barefoot. So then the little Goelets and Vanderbilts and other scions of the money kings wear perishable clothes, though they really should not, as it sets a bad example.

One little girl of about ten had a dress of white flannel with yoke and belt of silk, and a white straw sailor hat, and black silk stockings and suede slippers. Another wore a pretty gown of figured blue silk and velvet made as in the middle figure in the first illustration. The collar, forearm pieces and panel are of velvet, and with it is worn a Phrygian cap of blue silk with velvet band. The silk stockings and wading slippers complete the outfit. The tan on the face forms another part of it.

By the side of the blue dressed girl is her independent little sister in a red velvet kilted skirt and blouse, with a Tam O'Shanter of the same, and a cunning little doeskin jacket for cooler afternoons, and this also is to be worn while playing on the sands, making a bright bit against the dun colored beach and the blue of the sea.

Even daintier is the little pink and white suit of the little girl on the right of the second picture. The dress is of white challie with large pink polka dots, as to the skirt, while the waist is of pink surah and tied around the waist with bow and ends of pink ribbon. The ecru straw hat is turned up, with a tuft of plumes which stay but a short time in curl in the sea air, but she has her wading slippers and her clam shovel and is happy in spite of pink silk and feathers.

Prettier and more simple is the green cashmere dress of the middle figure, that of a dainty and precise little miss of twelve, who is, however, not too big to play in the water and on the sand. Her hat is a black openwork straw, covered with forgetmenots and their leaves.

One more little seaside suit and I shall have done with Newport babies. This is of blue and white flannel, the skirt and jacket blue and the vest and sash and Tam O'Shanter of white flannel.

The Casino children's dances and the parties given for the little ones at Newport are the occasions for great display in children's dresses, but it is at Saratoga that the greatest extravagance is shown. Little dresses are often made entirely of Mechlin, Valenciennes or even old English point lace over silk or satin slips, and the little necks and arms are often decorated with jewels which are strangely out of place on children.

READY TO WALK IN THE SEA. The finest mull and lawn, white silk and most delicate of laces, are used for children's dresses there, and the most of them are pure white, with only the ribbon trimming to give color. It is so much warmer at Saratoga than it is at Newport that it requires thinner material.

Asbury Park is the children's paradise though, for there the youngsters are rigged out in their oldest clothes and given big, shady old hats, and shovels and crab scoops, and away they go for a whole long day of unmixed delight without anything to hinder them from having all the fun they want.

At Coney Island and Rockaway the children are dressed in the best attire their parents can afford. It is often a very poor best, but the children don't mind as long as old ocean is there to give the same tan he bestows on those of more exclusive society.
