

Bolls and Pimples

Are nature's efforts to eliminate poison from the blood. This result may be accomplished much more effectually, as well as agreeably, through the proper excretory channels, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"For several years I was troubled with boils and carbuncles. In casting about for a remedy, it occurred to me that Ayer's Sarsaparilla had been used in my father's family, with excellent success, and I thought that what was good for the father would also be good for the son. Three or four bottles of this medicine entirely cured me, and I have not since—in more than two years—had a boil, pimple, or any other eruptive trouble. I can conscientiously speak in the highest terms of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and many years' experience in the drug business enables me to speak intelligently."—C. M. Hatfield, Farmland, Ind.

At Manitou.
MANITOU SPRINGS, Colo., June 27.—(Special.)—Manitou is to the people what a sugar barrel is to the flies on a bright summer day—decidedly attractive. There is an absence of flies and an influx of people at Manitou that is refreshing. These June days are of the best June that poets praise of—cool mornings, warm enough at noontime to rekindle the outdoor wanderer that it is summer, and evenings full of moonlight and coolness.
The walks, drives and trails about Manitou are so numerous that old timers of several seasons' experience find some new beauties whenever they go out. The country is paradise for the lively young woman or the brawny young man who delights in exploring expeditions. Manitou is best reached via the Union Pacific.
The Dakota Hot Springs.
The improvements that have taken place at the Dakota Hot Springs during the past year make it now one of the most popular, attractive and desirable resorts of the country. In addition to the benefits to be derived from the use of the water, the superior climate and beautiful natural surroundings render it an especially attractive resort, while the curative properties of the water makes the Springs a rival of the famous Hot Springs of Arkansas. Ample hotel accommodations are provided at reasonable rates, and the journey to and from can now be quickly and comfortably made via the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley Railroad, the only all rail line to the Hot Springs. Excursion tickets are sold at reduced rates. Full information can be obtained on application to

OF HOME DECORATION.

IT IS QUITE AS IMPORTANT AS ADORNMENT OF THE PERSON.

Increased Wealth and Lower Prices Have Combined to Give Us a Chance to Ornament Our Rooms More Artistically Than Formerly.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—The decoration of one's home is quite as important to a woman as the decoration of her person, and more so to the rest of a family, and fashions change in one as well as the other. To have a charming home is like having a beautiful frame and an artistic background for the lovely woman, who is the angel of the household.

NEW PORTIERE

The love of the beautiful which is ingrained in every woman's heart shows itself in many ways, but it is clear that her affection centers in her home, as even the poorest has its little ornaments which show the stringings of the woman for a "home beautiful." With increased material, prosperity and lower prices the people are turning more and more to artistic decoration, and portieres, window draperies, lambrequins and mantelpieces have now been "in" for several years, and have paved the way for the paneling of parlors, bedrooms and boudoirs, and sometimes even offices.

There is no more chenille, cotton faced flannel or silkolene used as draperies, and Madras and scrim have given place to Sheraton draperies, in rainbow stripes of satin on a transparent ground. The body is ecrú or biscuit or mastic, with stripes of different shades of green, yellow, blue or red, shading from one edge to the other, from the palest to darkest. This can be bought by the yard at very reasonable prices, and it is suitable for all kinds of bedroom draperies. Some of it has crosswise stripes in oriental style, the wider stripes at the bottom.

Silk faced tapestries, fifty-four inches wide, are shown for wall decorations and hanging, as well as coverings for furniture. A whole room done in one pattern is very elegant.

Silk faced portieres and others called Derby are very handsome, and some of them are reversible, requiring no lining. All silk portieres are made reversible also, with exquisite bordering in colonial designs. Some of the portieres are to be lined, and they are made of rich satin damasks, in two or three colors, in the most delicate and pleasing tints, in Louis XV, XVI and colonial patterns, the broad elegant enough for a queen's gown. These, when used for curtains and portieres, are lined with silk made in the same width, called sunshing drapery. It is changeable in two tints, one following the principal one in the damask and the other contrasting, and thrown over the surface is a trailing frostwork in white, which makes of it an exquisite material, which is also used separate from the damask in many instances, as it is reversible.

Table covers are made to match the portieres and hangings, and come in several sizes, so that a room can be completely furnished, so to speak, from one piece of goods. A few years ago this all would have been beyond the reach of any but the very wealthy, but these silks and tapestries are now being made in America, and while they are every whit as good and handsome, as well as durable as the imported, cost much less.

I give here illustrations of how these portieres should be arranged. The upper half of a portiere is from Senator Stewart's house. It is lined with sunshing silk, and is damask in small pattern, with a rich deep border to match above. The lower one is a door in the east room of the White House, showing a Louis XV portiere with deep bordering on foot and side. This is in a beautiful soft shade. The whole of the furnishing and panels in this room are made of the same. The portiere does not hang on rings, but seems to have been simply thrown over the pole.

WINDOW DRAPERY.

Window draperies and lambrequins are draped much as one likes, but these are two graceful styles. The upper represents the drapery at Mrs. Edison's parlor windows, in brocated with garnet and bullion fringe. The curtains are of brocated, in old gold and garnet. The lower one is like the drapery in old rose and old gold over doors and windows in Mrs. Remington's home. Below are reversible damask portieres and curtains.
OLIVE HARPER

A STORY OF GLADSTONE.

How He Dodged an Interview on a Delicate Question.

(Special Correspondence.)
LONDON, Aug. 30.—The industry of W. E. Gladstone, the "grand old man" of British politics, has long been the marvel of the empire. During the session of parliament his mail is very bulky, and two or three secretaries assist him to dispose of it. At least one of those secretaries is a member of parliament, who gives his services to the great Liberal leader without fee or reward. Every letter, no matter how trivial its import, is answered and filed away for ready reference. Special subjects receive the personal attention of Mr. Gladstone. He believes in the economy of time and postage, and sends short autographic replies on postal cards from his seat in the house.

One of the peculiarities of the old style British statesman is the tenacity with which he sticks to the institutions of the past. While stenography and typewriting have eased the labors of public men to an enormous extent, the old timers still adhere to the long-hand methods of their youth. A great deal of Mr. Gladstone's multitudinous correspondence is done by his own hand. His political secretaries are longhand writers. He does not employ a stenographer for his literary work, either. Taking into consideration the amount of work he does even now in the course of a year, one wonders when he gets time to keep himself posted on matters of legislation, to say nothing of reading to keep pace with the current thought of the times. And yet there is no man in the United Kingdom who is better posted on the literary movements of the world.

Mr. Gladstone detests interviewing as much as he likes the chance to address a crowd of picknickers at his country seat. To every request for his views on public events his secretary replies, regretting that the pressure on the great man's time precludes the possibility of a personal interview, but that any written question will receive his closest attention. In this way Mr. Gladstone saves himself a great deal of annoyance. He may or may not answer a query preferred in writing. There is invariably a large amount of uncertainty as to whether the second request will elicit the desired information. But the "grand old man" is pretty sure to send a postal card, saying nothing in a very graceful way.

I had occasion to test this matter last year. I wished to get an expression of Mr. Gladstone's opinions on questions relating to the tariff. I received the usual secretary's note that Mr. Gladstone would be pleased to answer any question submitted to him. I then wrote asking whether in his opinion free trade or protection was best for the material interests of the American workman. Next morning I received an autograph postal card in the following terms:

Sir—I regret to say I am not in a position to form new literary engagements, and also that I do not think advantage would arise from my entering further on advice to the people of the United States as to the best methods of securing their own interests. Yours very faithfully and obe., W. E. GLADSTONE.

What could be nearer than this method of dodging an interview on a delicate topic?

MARY KYLE DALLAS.

This Writer of Stories is Prominent in Sorosis.

(Special Correspondence.)

MARY KYLE DALLAS.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—At the Sorosis functions one of the most prominent women is Mrs. Mary Kyle Dallas, a writer of charming stories. Mrs. Dallas is one of the best known literary workers of New York. For eighteen years she was connected with The Ledger, doing short stories regularly for that paper. Mrs. Dallas' contract with The Ledger has just expired, and she is now a free lance, her work appearing in most of the popular weekly papers.

Mrs. Dallas has just finished a serial for a Philadelphia publisher, and is, moreover, a contributor to the novelette series of the American Press Association. At present the lady is collaborating with Mme. Mathilde Estouan upon a novel, the scene of which is laid in Hungary, and in addition is at work upon a purely American comedy, her ambition being toward dramatic work for the future.

Mrs. Dallas is devoted to writing, considering fiction merely a delightful amusement. It has never become tedious to her, although she has worked steadily at it since she was eighteen. She writes always in perfect solitude with a pen as big as a broomstick. Mrs. Dallas is a famous pedestrian and thinks nothing of walking five miles in low heeled shoes.

Mrs. Dallas comes of a professional family, every member of which paints, writes, edits or acts. She is the daughter and widow of artists. She is a plump, agreeable woman, with blond hair and most agreeable manners.
