Olive Harper Writes of the Latest in Mourning Costumes-A Clock That Is Popular, but Not to the Liking of the Writer.

(Special Correspondence.) New York, Dec. 24.-When Solomon declared that there was nothing new under the sun, I don't believe he had any premonition of the bales on bales of new materials that are placed on view at the big importers', for there are so many new things that one poor head can't see them all in a month without aching ready to burst. One goes from one place undreamed of in each. I saw Saturday a line of rich black silk with a double brocade, that is to say there were flowers in delicate natural tints, brocaded upon another and rather different shades. This applique is A GLEAN OF COMFORT, as often done in cloth as in velvet, and indeed I think that done in cloth is more effective really, than the velvet. There are shot silks and shot velvets and shot brocades. They are in changeable tints, which I have always admired, and I noticed also some shot effects in wool and silk goods, and some all wools where the twisted threads somehow showed different lights as the sun would strike upon it.

The new spring woolens differ from the old ones only in that they are a trifle lighter in weight. The cloth for tailor gowns is literally "cream laid," it is so fine, so firm and smooth. This comes in all colors, but the favorites are biscuit and drab shades, though of course there are others, particularly the faded leaf shades.

There is a heavy Melton cloth, intended for spring cloaks and long wraps, which has a close, heavy body of satin surfaced cloth with raised velvet designs upon it. In mourning outfits there is a little but very decorous attempt at ornamentation, a trying to break the monotony of the severe lines heretofore seen. For first mourning the deep veil and straight line are de rigeur, but when the long veil can be laid aside a little gleam of comfort can be judiciously signaled by fancy curves to the crape bordering. No crape but the English is ever used as ap-plique trimming. The elegant long cape worn in the illustration is lined with dead silk, and at the top of the collar has a curled line of ostrich flues. The bonnet has also a jet ornament in front above the folds of the crape. This dress is not, however, suitable for a widow until at least six months after her be reavement, but could be worn by a sister or daughter after three months.

Among the "high novelties" of the sea son is the cloak represented here, and it is called the Reve, or dream cloak. It seems to me to partake more of the character of a nightmare, but as it has taken such a hold upon the fancy of the "car riage customers." I suppose it is a duty to show it. It was made in the original of thick ladies cloth in a faded brick dust color. The sleeves cannot be described. but can be understood by a glance at the picture. A deep watteau plait is laid in the back, reaching to the neck. The shoulder piece is of white velvet embroidered. with gold and having a fringe of gilt beads. It is cut in a scallop to the neck in the back, from where droops a gold pas-ming similar to those on the front at the joining below the waist. Black fox fur bands in state fashion go around the shoulder and fall to the feet. The garment is lined with gold colored quilted satin. Another of brown velutina trimmed with cinnamon bear fur and gold embroidery made in the same general style is equally strik-

The new bonnets are mostly in the Quaker style, with broad ribbon strings which tie under the chin in a wide picked out bow. Some of them have the front dented down in Mary Stuart style. The poke is prettier for young faces and the dented rather more becoming for older ones. Any of the Quaker styles is pretty and generally

A STATE EMPLOYE

He tells a Reporter About Being Cured by Dr. Dennis, the Catarrh Specialist.

Nothing succeeds like success. This adage is more than exemplified by the experience of Dr. Dennis in this city. His success in curing many bad cases of catarrh who had despaired of relief bas filled his office with patients from morning to night. The following is only one of the many statements which could be made public if space did not forbid. A PLAIN STATEMENT,

A PLAIN STATEMENT,

Ten years ago I was attacked by that dread disease, Catarrh. It began after I had had a bad cold as a stopping up of the nostrils so I could not breathe except through my mouth. It grew worse from year to year. I would hawk and spit almost conderf; my appetite was poor; bowels costive; fet weak and unable to engage in any physical exertion; my ears began finally discharging a bad smelling substance and my nostrils pained me to breathe through them; I became alarmed. I had tried everything and paid out a great deal to physicians. I finally went to the mountains near Denver. About september 1, 1891, I placed my case in Dr. Dennis' bands for treatment, and today, November 1, I consider myself entirely well. The cure has been a surprise, but a most happy one. I will take great pleasure in answering any inquiries about Dr. Dennis and his treatment." Any person can, by calling on Dr. Dennis, learn this gentleman's name and address, which he doe not wish to have printed in the papers. He is an employe at one of the state I istitutions in thiscity and well known
