THE JENNESS MILLER MATINEE.

A large and appreciative audience, composed principally of ladies, greeted Mrs. Jenness Miller on her first appearance in this city Monday afternoon at the Lansing theatre.
Mrs. Miller is a woman of fine appearance and most charming manner, and held the closest attention of her audience during the two and one-half hours of her lecture.
After being happily introduced by Mrs. T.
H. Leavitt, Mrs. Miller opened her lecture by reviewing the sufferings undergone by woman because of her persistent disobedience to the laws of nature. She pointed out clearly the objections to the modern woman's dress. These she thought were: First, its unhealthfulness and lack of physical comfort; second, its lack of harmony. In speaking of the dress correctly made, it must be without ligature or band. She emphasized the importance of the development of those muscles which it is common to find undeveloped, thus making the use of artificial support necessary. If men would be dressed as women are they would either die or become idiotic in less than ten years.

The union garment, a chintzette, and a divided skirt are all that are necessary for healthful and artistic clothing. She spoke of the petticoat as simply a relic of barbarism.
Her idea of what constituted a foundation for health was physical culture. Health once secured is often shattered though the use of the corset and the weight sustained from the hips. The dress should hang from the shoulders.

Mrs. Miller wore several costumes to illustrate her ideas. The first one was a beautiful gown of dark green satin, artistically embroidered in colors of the mahogany shades.
The work was done by Bulgarian women of Constantinople. The train was formed by a Watteau plait of light green satin. It was made with half sleeves and cut low in the neck.

The next costume was remarkably pretty in its simplicity. It was made of pink China silk, shirred about the neck and waist. The full sleeves were shirred at the elbows to the depth of six inches, with lace falling out from the neck and sleeves. Lace and fine needlework are the most artistic trimming, to show the ladies that it was possible to have stylish street dresses and still enjoy perfect comfort.

The next garment was a tailor-made dress of tan material. Special attention was drawn to the fact that it had no train, which she pronounced positively indecent.
To be artistic the proper relation must be preserved between the bust, waist line and hips. It was most artistic in design, the material being dark green plush combined with a lighter shade and edged with pale green feather trimming.

Following this one was a fashionable reception gown, but not artistic in Mrs. Miller's estimation, as it was too close fitting. It was a heavy striped brown silk, with pink crepe vest and sleeves. The necessary points in healthful dressing are: room at the waist, at the elbow and the shoulder.

The rainy day costume of Bedford cord was next shown. It was knee length. While there is no doubt about the comfort of this dress, it would require some courage to adopt it, for while with galets and cloak one might wear this in the street without embarrassment, but would still feel extremely timid and awkward on removing them, as one would be compelled to sit either office or shop.
The beautiful Paris gown made decollete, was greatly admired by all the ladies.
It was of white satin, combined with terra cotta plush, artistically flowered with delicate terra cotta sprays. All of these gowns are made over a dress form, which fits perfectly and admits of decoration and style as the wearer shall dictate.

The ladies of Lincoln feel greatly indebted to the W. C. A. workers, for it was through their efforts that this talented and able lecturer was brought to Lincoln.

THE TRAVELLING MAN'S BALLOON.

Saturday evening Lincoln Council No. 7, Commercial Pilgrims of America, gave their first family social at their council chamber in the Brown block, which prove to be a most enjoyable affair. The evening was pleasantly spent in cards and dancing, and at 10:30 the party left the lodge room and proceeded to the Capital hotel to partake of a banquet that had been prepared for them.
Manager Dick Johnson had spared no pains to make this success it proved to be.

The dining room had been arranged to represent the lodge room, and in seating the guests the officers had been given places at the table corresponding to those occupied in the lodge. Brown's orchestra furnished delightful music during the feast. In place of the toasts which usually follow the company was entertained with a recitation by Miss Eddie Stein, entitled "The Drummer," in which was depicted the ability of the average travelling man to get out of a difficulty in a very clever manner. Miss Stein rendered the piece in a very pleasing manner, her powers of mimicry being exceptionally good, the whole showing careful study and training. Among those who were present were Messrs. and Madames L. W.

Snow, D. E. Keyes, L. W. Garoutte, F. A.
Bartholomew, T. Jurken, K. D. Binford, L.
Katzenstein, S. F. Wallace, E. P. Fountain,

Binford, R. M. Simons, C. B. Allan, F. A.

Sadie Lloyd and many others.
