HOW CALLAHAN WENT TO THE WALL. There was a man named Callahan who paid a goodly sum for a suit of clothes, and always looked as spruce as chewing gum.

His coat and vest were neatly pressed, his hat had not a speck, and neither had his shirt front, nor the collar round his neck.

This noble youth, to tell the truth, set very little store on anything the earth contained aside from what he wore.

Alack! A lass! It came to pass when Cal was twenty-four he met a girl much lovelier than any clothing store.

He popped—was spurned. She saw there burned within his hearing breast True love, but she could never wed a man so poorly dressed.

She said, No, and let him go from dear old Hackensack To wander setting-sun-ward with his old clothes on his back.

Take the Biggest. He was 90 per cent. mouth, and the odds and ends of his face that weren't mouth were freckles.

Mrs. McSweeney and her husband walked down the avenue on their way to their new house—residence. Mrs. McS. called it, and she thinks the rent warrants the liberty when a load of furniture belonging to some mover passed them.
