"Yes, Edward," she said, looking over the edge of her coffeecup.

"I will go with you and pick out a nice hat. You have been wanting one for a long time. I will show you that it is possible to get something elegant at a low figure. This extravagance among wives must be stopped."

"Now then," be whispered, as they entered the store, "my mother never paid more than $2.25 for a hat, and they do say that in her day she was the best dressed woman in town. I shall take pattern after her."

"Take it away, take it away!" he gasped as the clerk showed a stylish thing in blue marked seven dollars. "Do you think I have just escaped from some asylum? I am after one of those knockdown hats, I am, such as I read about in the paper." "Ah!" he remarked, "that is more like

He made a wry face and she laid it aside with a sigh.

"Well, well!" he ejaculated, "if here isn't a hat that I like better. Six dol lars, ch? Well, that is too dear, but it is so becoming. Still, I would not like to buy it, as I am afraid my mother would turn over in her grave.'

"Here, milliner," he went on as he caught his wife peeping in the glass, on her head a hat marked twelve dollars: "here, just wrap up that little thing in blue and send it home. The longer we stay the more perplexed we become There is nothing like promptitude, even in the world of fashion. Goodby, love: I am off for the office."

"Did that thing come, eh?" he said sweetly that evening, as he sank into an easy chair after dinner.

"It did, Edward; it is just lovely; let me show you.

She stood before the glass a long time; he was regarding her with beaming face: it was a sweet home picture.

"Always wear a hat like that," he said: "it is so becoming, my dear. And I suppose the bill came, too, eh?

"Yes, Edward, dearie. It is only forty-four dollars!"-New York Recorder.

A Keen Answer Turneth Away Churls. This incident is told as happening a few days ago to the daughter of the late General Clinton B. Fisk, showing that she has that keen wit which her father possessed. Getting into a Twenty-third street car, and forgetting that they have now conductors, she absent-mindedly handed a quarter to the man next to her, intending that he should pay the fare. The man, who was well dressed, drew himself up, and said stiffly and audibly, "Madam, I am not a conluctor."

"Oh, excuse me; I thought you were a gentleman," was the quick reply, and the man left the car amid the smiles of the passengers.—New York Tribune.

THESE WARM SUMMER DAYS

Already give notice that city life will soon become a burden to be borne only when stern necessity offers no others course. The tired clerk, the student, the professional man, and those whose occupation confines existence to the daily routine of counting room, office desk, bar or pulpit, find flight from these busy haunts a comfort and relief. A deep longing comes for the music of rushing waters, a plunge in the briny deep, or a frolic in the restless surf-for a stroll on the wet sands, where the sait breezes of old ocean kiss away the lines of care and toil and where nature's voice sings a fullaby of gentlest rythm. One wants to get away from brick walls, street cars and cabs, out of sight of the peripatetic boot black and newsboy, far from the hand organ, the peanut stand and the itine ant peddler and live in the country, which nature has garnished with bountiful hand. The mere thought of mountain streams, a camp in the woods, deep pools and shady nooks, a moonlight sail on placid lake and however great the imagination, actually being there is a thousand times better. The question is, "where to go" and "how to go,"
