THE COURIER PUBLISHING CO.

W. MORTON SMITH, EDITOR.

Two considerations have prompted the change in the day of publication of THE COURIER from Saturday to Sunday—the certainty that the value of the paper as an advertising medium will be materially increased, and the hope that its interest for the reading public will also be enhanced. THE COURIER will hereafter be delivered by carriers, and it should not fail to reach every subscriber in this city before 7 A.M. Sunday. Any failure to receive the paper promptly should be immediately reported to the office.

THE Kearney Journal, under new management, is one of the most readable papers in the state.

MR. MOSHER may rest easy in the assurance that the Nebraska press "will give him whatever credit is due him," when he is "vindicated."

THERE are still a few criminals in the penitentiary from Douglas county, but Governor Crouse is turning them loose as fast as possible.

THAT projected cowboy race has made Chadron almost as widely known as Nebraska City, the home of J. Sterling Morton and the Honorable Pete Brown.

RUSSET SHOES have won the day. About the only people that object to them now are those who have big feet. It is a well-known fact that large feet do not appear any smaller when encased in russet shoes.

THE BELIEF that the opinion of Chief Justice Maxwell "was plugged to size," is, we regret to say, somewhat widely prevalent. The dissenting opinion fits to a T what would be Judge Maxwell's idea of the present opportunity in Nebraska politics.

"OVER confidence in myself caused me to fail," remarked C. W. Mosher. It is not generally known that Mr. Mosher failed—most people think it was the bank. And there is an idea prevalent that the bank failed because Mr. Mosher stole the deposits.

THE Press says that Nebraska City "has plenty of water in case of need." Of course it is a good idea to be well fortified, but water is and probably always will be superfluous in Nebraska City. When the Otter braves feel the "need" of something, it isn't water they want.

THE Fremont Tribune asks, "What has become of General and Commander Paul Vandevort?" Just as if a man could be a patriot all the time without taking a rest. THE COURIER may not be able to lay its hands on the grand old man right now, but it will agree to produce him in time to launch the next state legislature in a proper manner.

IT has been suggested that Frank Hurd be made the democratic nominee for governor of Ohio. Hurd has been for years an uncompromising foe of that culminating atrocity of republican legislation which Mr. McKinley, the present governor, so adequately represents, and a contest between these gentlemen would be a battle royal, indeed. It would be a double contest—Hurd against McKinley and free trade against protection.

IF Secretary Carlisle could only be induced to read a few hundred editorials in the daily papers on the "financial situation," we are sure everything would be clear to him and he would have no further trouble with the country's bank account. THE COURIER has now on hand a large number of Nebraska exchanges in which the whole subject of finance is so intelligently and tersely treated that one wanders why there should be such general ignorance on this point. If the secretary will have the postmaster general instruct Mr. Gere to give us the necessary stamps for postage, we will take pleasure in forwarding these valuable treatises to the treasury department.

IMPORTANT STATE elections will be held in New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Nebraska, Virginia, Massachusetts and Wisconsin, in November. Some of these states will elect a governor, others subordinate state officers, and others a legislature. This election, the first since Grover Cleveland worked his great confidence game, will be watched with the utmost interest. The result of the voting in November will be the first tangible evidence of the public appreciation of the policy of the democratic party, or rather Mr. Cleveland's policy. As a democratic contemporary puts it, "it will be shown whether public confidence in the democracy, so loudly expressed at the election of 1892, has been increased or impaired, and whether the rebuke thus administered to the republicans for their many offenses against just, judicious and needful constitutional government, was merely a temporary manifestation of discontent, or the foreshadowing of a permanent exclusion from the administration of affairs." The president of the United States is a very able man; republicans willingly concede to him wisdom and independence and a certain degree of conscientiousness in the performance of public duty; but it is difficult, even for the most ardent admirers of Mr. Cleveland, to see in just what manner the president has strengthened the democratic party since his election. Somehow, Mr. Cleveland, has failed to touch the spring of democratic enthusiasm. Elected on a platform which declared the republican policy of protection unconstitutional and a fraud, and which pledged the obliteration of that policy, Mr. Cleveland has continued to walk in the footsteps of James G. Blaine and Benjamin Harrison. The Chicago platform has been tossed in the garret of past expediency, where it rests on the top of a mighty pile of campaign promises—democratic and republican. In the meantime the president has been running the government, guided by his own will and not by democratic declarations. Whether he will sail away to a new harbor is still uncertain. For the present he is content to remain close to the shore of republican policy, where there is protection and a safe shelter. Mr. Carlisle's tentative trip into new waters, in which disaster was perilously near, has not had a reassuring effect on Mr. Cleveland, and as time goes on, democratic promises seem farther from fulfillment than ever. The president voluntarily assumed the burden of making all appointments himself and he has staggered under the load; he has been kept very busy; but his efforts in this direction have not called out enthusiastic democratic benedictions. In fact it can scarcely be contended that Mr. Cleveland has strengthened either himself or his party since March 4. Whether the democrats will emphasize their dissatisfaction at the polls in this fall's election, remains to be seen.

THE impeachment case was a good thing—for the lawyers. The independents wanted to manufacture some campaign thunder, and they were shrewd enough to make the state pay the expenses. The thunder has been prepared, the people have paid the bills, the lawyers have possession of the money, and the state officials, after having been used for political purposes only, are declared innocent and are once more permitted to perform their duties. There never was at any time any belief that anything would come of the proceedings. The impeachment was nothing more nor less than a strategic move on the part of the independents, and those who work with the independents—rather costly for the state, and it accomplished all that was expected.

PERHAPS Governor McKinley's re-nomination and the tremendous enthusiasm incident thereto may have evidenced the governors great personal popularity, more than it indicated an empowering sentiment in favor of the great economic principle which he represents. But in any event Mr. Kinley is to-day one of the brightest republicans in the country, and that he will be an important factor at the next presidential convention of his party seems highly probable. Wm. Kinley and Tom Reed will be popular anti-convention candidates.

JAY BURROWS and J. M. Thompson have been impeached, too, with Burrows, and Thornton, and Thompson, and Holden, and a few others to keep things interesting the independent party can never be dull.

THE REPUBLICANS will doubtless dispense with the formality of a heresy trial in Judge Maxwell's case.

MR. Jacob Mahler who closed his classes in dancing, Wednesday, at the Lausang Academy, leaves to-day with his wife and daughter, Rosalind, for an extended eastern trip, stopping first at Chicago, then Niagara Falls, and from there to New York, where he will spend three weeks before going to Saratoga for the summer, where he acts as master of ceremonies at Congress Hall for the sixteenth consecutive season. He has met with his usual success here; many of the best families have availed themselves of his superior instruction, while he is at all times strict with his pupils, yet he rules them with kindness, and their affection for him was evident at the last lesson, bidding him goodbye and urging him to return next spring—which he will do. Lincoln always has a hearty welcome for Mr. Mahler.

Professor August Hagenow, of the conservatory of music, will give a farewell concert in Y. M. C. A. hall, June 14, for the benefit of the Y. M. C. A. building fund, and will leave Lincoln shortly afterwards to accept a position with Walter Damrosch in his New York Symphony orchestra, as first violinist. Lincoln people will regret his departure as he is one of the best musicians in the city.

WEBSTER & ROGERS,
1013 O street.

WANTED—Nursing by a thoroughly experienced and competent nurse. Have nursed ten years in the east. Inquire 1035 F street.

"Is this hot enough for you?" is a silly question; but if you meet a man who complains of the suffering from the heat, ten to one you will find on inquiry, that he does not use Ayer's Sarsaparilla to tone up his system and free his blood from irritating humors.

The World's Fair.
No one should hesitate to visit Chicago on the score of expense. It's a mistake to suppose that a small fortune is needed. Twenty-five or thirty dollars is ample for a week's stay. For that amount you can get a good room, board, daily admission to the fair and to three or four of the Midway Pleasure attractions and still have enough money left for car fare, lunches, and other miscellaneous expenses.
Your railroad fare is not included in the above estimate, of course, but you can learn what that will cost by enquiring of Bonnell at the depot, or Zieman at Tenth and O streets, who will also tell you all about trains.
Excursion rates every day.

Run in to Herpolsheimer & Co's and try one of their fine pure drinks of soda water from their beautiful new fountain.
