Assurance Doubly Sure.
 It was plain that the dark man who tossed uneasily upon the bed was at the door of death.
 Already the light of another world shone in his eyes, and his breath came in labored gasps.
 "I wish"—
 The lawyer bent low to catch every word that fell from the patient's lips.
 "—all my property to go to my eldest daughter."
 The lawyer made a note of it.
 "I wish"—
 His voice was very faint now.
 "—to die in the conviction that she will get it. Is it asking too much of you?"
 He turned his fevered glance appealingly upon his legal adviser.
 "—to marry her?"
 The lawyer was deeply affected and could only reply by pressing the hand of his expiring client.—Detroit Tribune.

An Apology.

 Mrs. W., dancing with Mr. S., who is noted for being almost the thinnest man living, slips and to save herself catches hold of Mr. S.'s legs.
 "Mrs. W. (trying to apologize and blushing deeply)—I beg your pardon, Mr. S., but a drowning man will catch at straws, you know.—Vogue.

FASHION'S GOOD NEWS

New York, Sept. 27.—And so we are not to have hoops this season, and the skirts are coming down to more reasonable proportions, though they still stand out quite wide around the bottom. This is the dictum of fashion, and the ladies who have been undecided may now make up their fall gowns in empire gowns, in round skirts of straight breadths or the circle, or the skirts may be plaited. There is a wide liberty of choice. But no skirt is to train on the sidewalk in the street. All dresses to be worn out of doors should clear the ground at least half an inch all around. Skirts are still slightly stiffened around the bottom by means of crinoline or wigan. Few use the horse-hair, as it is such scratchy stuff.
 The favorite dress material for nice out of door gowns will doubtless be broadcloth in the beautiful new shades, and after that will come the changeable wools, which are of remarkable beauty this fall, and they are of excellent quality. The woolen changeable goods are durable for the first time, as mohair is used for the underlying color instead of silk. This is quite as lustrous as silk and gives more body.
 Overskirts to woolen and other dresses are seen quite often, and they are looped either at one side or in festoons all around. I took note of an imported walking gown made in this fashion. The skirt was of gendarme blue cloth and the overskirt of mode cloth. This was looped at intervals all around, and down each seam was a very narrow band of astrakhan. The waist was of tan, with a fanciful overdie of the blue, with every seam outlined with the narrow fur bands. The sleeves were of soft puffs with three stiff little caps at the shoulder, each lined with the mode color and with the blue outside. The back of the corsage was pointed as well as the front. There was a short wrap made of blue cloth faced with the mode, which could be thrown over the shoulders if the day was cool.
 I saw another odd dress, which goes to show that fur will be very largely employed as trimming on the most unpromising kinds of material and pattern. This was a plaid cheviot, brown and mode. The skirt was plain, with all the plaits set in the back. There was a vest of cream colored surah with a belt of sealskin. The Eton jacket had wide revers also of sealskin, and there was a band all around the skirt of the same fur scalloped out and bound on the edges with a very neat and narrow cream colored velvet binding. The plaid was cut on the straight, sleeves and all. Only the practical eye would pick this dress out of a hundred as the costliest dress of all. It was lined with silk and finished in the most perfect manner.
 There are many novelties in furs for decoration, among them a fichu cape of black astrakhan. This crosses over the bust, and the tabs reach the back and fall below the waist. The collars are not as high or flaring as they were, but then the storm collars are not often seen on early capes. The capes of marten and other furs stand out all around in the same style as the cloth capes, and they naturally cost more than the little close ones used to. The tiny English fur collar made of a small "bestie" is quite popular with young folks, and the feather bows will be very generally worn for early fall, and in fact, I think, all the all the season, as they are too becoming to be thrown aside, and they can be worn with coats.
 The new cloth dresses are so very refined that I cannot refrain from telling

STREET AND HOUSE DRESSES.

NEW CLOTH MODEL DRESSES.
 of two more imported models. One was of old rose cloth, with two sets of buttons on the skirt, a full French waist and a short cape with pearl gray velvet revers and collar. The other was a princess of drab cloth, with narrow fur strips down each seam. The upper part of the corsage was of emerald velvet, and so were the puffs to the sleeves. In the back the surplus fullness of the skirt was laid in four plaits at the waist line of the three seams. The lining for the princess is cut all in one and the upper part sewn onto the same lining.
