PHANT YOUNG TREES IN ORCHARD.

Prof. Build, replying to a correspon-Iowa State Register:

forest trees know that the tree that pushes | Larkin, in Germantown Telegraph. down its water feeding roots where the seed was planted makes the cleanest and best growth, and that it endures all our trying summer and winter changes much orders more than two or three sorts of better than the transplanted tree of the pears, apples, grapes or rasberries to be same variety or species. Hence the plan of setting young fruit trees in nursery row with a view to again cutting the far reaching roots in two years to set in orchard, is favorable to the dvelopment of fibrous surface roots, but it is usually fatal to the health and longevity of trees as hardy

To impress still further the importance of this idea of strong, far reaching roots, we will state that many experienced planters of the west will not take a nursery tree that has not at least one long strong rust. In setting they make a deep hole with an iron bar in the bottom of the exempation, and carefully insert in it the one long root, firming it with the bar as we plant a long pear graft. The placing of the other roots and filling in loes not vary from the usual method. Proc who may feel like making sport of this deep extending root should remember the much sport that was once made of our idea of deep planting of the grape to bridge over the critical period when the vina was setting up for business in a cough, trying climate.

Plant the young trees in orehard and give them honest care. But if you want to cripple them for life, set them in nursery row and two years later, when they are just getting hold of mother earth again with a system of long and deep annually fine crops of fruit if standing roots, cut them out with a sharp spade close to the banks of a living stream. DON'T GET DISCOURAGED.

The man who is detered from planting a home orchard because an exceptionally hard winter has kitled or injured his trees, commits a serious mistake. In the best orchard countries disease or other disability is apt to overtake fruit trees. The regular orchardist is not therefore det rred from planting. On the contrary, it is done at once, and even trees thought not to be sufficiently fruitful to repay the care they must have, are grubbed up for fuel. This is wise from a business point of view. It is equally wise for the farmer to have a select orchard of fruits for home use. The reason is, he always has fruits in variety during their season, except in years not prolific in fruit. It may be stated as true that the farmer who has no orchard seldom has a proper supply of fruit for his family, and it is equally true that there are few situations where an orchard, given the same care and attention that is accorded to general farm crops, will not, one year with another, give a fair supply of
