SOLDIERS CELEBRATE

The Ties of Fellowship Bring them From Afar.

Safe in Camp, Shielded From Storm, Time Passes Pleasantly with Incident Reciting.

From Tuesday's Daily.

Those who are left of Nebraska's Soldier Sons know what a re union means. They have now been scattered twenty-five years, but the coast of Washington is is not too far from the scene of the organizing of the first company, twenty nine years ago, to prevent them coming to meet their comrades. Fellow patriots only smile at distance.

Mingling among them today in the G. A. R. hall the reporter's eye was quick to observe: A hundred bodies that struggled through the civil war, some maimed, some whole and hearty, some snowy heads, some comparitively young, many poor, others bearing the appearance of having plenty, no two alike, but there is one spirit of union and patriotism that prevails to warm each other's heart and make quick friends of acquaintances almost forgotten. Hardships, incidents and exploits are freely told in little groups, till the roll call sounded, and with old-time military step lines were formed and a march made to the depot to welcome recruits on the flyer.

Many enquire for comrades whose memory is cherished, and frequently as they meet hearty tears of glad joy and fulfilled expectation express the feelings that words cannot utter, and eloquently answer the question: What is in a reunion?

A scene of great enthusiasm occurred on the return from the depot to the hall as the flags of the regiments, faded and hanging in shreds to the staff, were unfurled for the comrades to behold, and three great cheers went up for flags that they had followed.

The following is a list of names of survivors of the First and Second who had registered up to 3 p. m.

FIRST NIGHT IN CAMP.

First and Second Nebraska Burn Bright Fires at Rockwood Hall.

Governor Thayer, General McNeill, Tom Majors, Major Spearman Address the Comrades.

From Wednesday's Daily.

Last evening's trains added considerably to the attendance of the reunion, and at 8 p. m. Rockwood hall was filled with comrades and citizens and ladies whose patriotism moved them to come to the campfire. The hall was beautifully decorated with national colors, and in the front of the hall three beautiful archways were erected before the rostrum draped with bunting, flags and evergreen and surmounted by a life portrait of Gen. R. R. Livingston—a face familiar to all the comrades.

At 8:15 Mayor Richey called the house to order and suggested the selection of a chairman. Judge E. M. Lowe, of O'Neill (comrade Co. D. 1st reg.) was unanimously the choice. Begging the honor to be addressed as "comrade" on this occasion instead of "Judge," Comrade Lowe took the chair, and announced he awaited the pleasure of the people. "Comrade J. Q Goss" was the first call; he modestly thanked his comrades for the honor to speak a few words, and paid his tribute to the loyal territory of Nebraska, whose "people's hearts were but the hearts of the American people," when they, from their sparse settlements, raised a regiment on the first call, for the front. Led by the Glee club, the comrades made the hall ring with "our country."

Major Tom Majors, of Peru, of the First Nebraska, responded to a seige of calls; and standing before his comrades spoke eloquently of the memory of Gen. R. R. Livingston. Turning to the chairman, and referring to his preference to being "comrade" and privilege at not holding a "commission," with sarcastic mirth he made much laughter and amusement, and turning the fun to the Nebraska Second, at their expense, kept the applause rolling on.

Major Pearman, of Nebraska City, by call, responded, to defend the gallant Second that did service on the frontier.

In response to the next call, and amidst great applause, Governor John M. Thayer took the stand. He said "Members of the First and Second Nebraska regiments and all other soldiers from Nebraska in the war: If there ever was a time which I have looked forward to, and for which I have hoped, it is this occasion and I experience its realization tonight. It has been a longing, hardly expected to be satisfied; and it is owing to the persistent efforts of Mr. McMaken and others that we have this pleasure. I have looked forward to tonight with feelings of great anticipation, since the call. Though advised by my physician not to use my voice much I use it here to express my gratification of once more looking into the faces of these comrades through whose valiant service this is now the land of the free and home of the brave. When the call was made upon the small territory of Nebraska for one regiment to be raised from 28,000 people I remember well when the first company reported in Omaha—company A, raised here in Plattsmouth,—being in command of Captain Livingston—then captain, now no more. It was my good fortune to be appointed colonel of the regiment acting under orders from Gen. Grant we reported to General Fremont at St. Louis."

The regiment was in the battles of Ft. Henry, Ft. Donaldson, Shiloh, Siege of Cornith, Siege of Memphis, Cape Gerardeau, Pilot Knob, and Duvall's Bluff. The governor quoted Gen. Grant at the battle of Ft. Donaldson as follows: "Your First Nebraska has covered itself with glory this afternoon," and at Pilot Knob: "I have been surprised hat the little territory of Neb aska, 800 miles up the Missouri river has been able to raise one regiment and send it to the front," and after that Gen. Grant seemed to feel a special interest in First Nebraska. Every citizen of Nebraska has reason to be proud of the reputation which the Nebraska soldiers made during the war. The comrades delighted to applaud their leader, and after a "rally" song called out their General, John McNeil, of St. Louis, Mo. The General was greeted with rounds of applause, and he was pleased, too, to meet the men. He displayed no flight of oratory, and apologized by stating that as he looked around and saw so many of the soldiers of Nebraska he felt sorry that the vocabulary and oratorical department of his education had been neglected. Referring to the "holy war" of the crusaders, which lasted more than a century, he could but contrast it with the war in which the Nebraska men went to the front, and call it of all wars holy, as no war had for its accomplishment so good an object as the salvation of the liberties of this country and the protection of the liberty of mankind. The General then recounted the battle of Cape Gerardeau, and spoke highly of the then Capt. Majors. He closed his talk with an invitation to the poorer soldier boys to come to the State of Missouri where they are now beginning to be welcome, and buy the cheapest and best land in America, etc.

Miss Grace McMaken recited the declamation "How Ruby Played the Piano," and responded to the great rounds of applause with another selection.

Fred Harris, now a Methodist minister at Griswold, Iowa, was the last comrade to speak.
