HE ATE BUZZARD.

Special Correspondence to the Glob Democrat, A pretty example for you to set, fighting at your age!"

Justice Browne eyed the two old dar kies severely. One had an eye completely closed, two teeth missing, and his head, minus a hat, showed signs of having been violently denuded of the greater part of its thatch, while the other's coat was torn from collar to skirt his 'ear bleeding, and limping painfully in one leg. The two glared at each other and began to talk at once, but the Justice stopped them.

"Quietly, quietly, now. Uncle Jonah, you begin. Tell it briefly, though."

"W'y, sub, hit war dis away. Me an' my ole 'oman hed a leetle shelf on de back po'ch, whar we kep' de meat ober might for ter keep hit cool, an' it happen dat ev'y now and den dat de meat 'ud be gond w'en daylight comes. Cudn't stan' dat, y'know. Jedge, an' de ole oman, who am de cutest critter in de country, 'gun ter notice dat w'en our sassage meat or de live or de tripe was missn' dat Bier Abram hed sassage or liver or tripe fer dinner. She'd kinder drap in ter see ef she finked right, w'en der 'ud be a mighty flusteration, an by de time she git in at de do' de meat 'ud be gone from de table, do de smell be mighty strong unner de nose. Wal, sah, we got mighty sick of dis way o' doin' an' night 'fo last we done fix up a way zer git even wif dis ole feef."

"F'ief yerself, ye black scamp!" fiercely rejoined Uncle Abram, bis re maining eye revolving threateningly.

* Silence, sir. Ge on, Uncle Jonah," said the Judge.

"Ep'aim- he my son, sah-done killed a buzzard dat day, mistookin' hit for a crow in de fiel' war he wak birnin' off de ole cotton stalk, an' he brung hit home an' say: 'Daddy, Ise got holt o' a way we kin cyure Uncle Abram's hankerin' arter our meat ' An' he set down an' pick Brer Buzzard clean, an' turn up he legs like a tukkey ready for bakin', an we put him on de shelf, an' sho' 'nough w'en we git up nex' mornin' dat nice fat tukkey, he! he! he! war gone, an' de smoke jist a rollin' out 'o Brer Abram's chimney. Dey war bakin' de tukkey! W'en der diuner was ober, Brer Adram he come out strollin' long mighty scrumptous, but he look lak he done had a putty hard wrastle, for dat buzzard war a ele one, an' I spect mighty tough eatin'. The Petition Arrives. Today was filed the petition asking for an election to relocate the county seat. The petition contains 3,271 names and is being inspected by the commison lieutenant governor as a basis; the number required is 3,080, which allows them nearly two hundred more votes than is required for the calling of the election. The list will be carefully verified before any action is taken on it. The petitioners are in the nature of plaintiffs before a court and the defendants must have an opportunity for a fair shewing on the other side.
