A Drummer Squelched.

It was in the old days, when traveling by stage coach was more common than it is at present, that the then archbishop of Paris, Monseigneur Affre, voyaging to a nearby parish, took place in a dilligence with a number of gentlemen of different social stations. Among the group was a young drummer for a busisness house who, like his successors of a later era, was ever on the lookout for a good story in his own mind and practical joke. The cherical standing of the archlishop did not exempt him even from attempts at banter or warticism, but with the consideration he thought due to the company present he passed the youngstor's efforts over with merely an indulgent smile. Wating bolder by this apparent immunity, the young traveler at last went beyond all bounds of proper respect.

"Can you tell me, your grace," he asked spiritedly, "the difference between the archbishop and an ass?"

The reverend gentleman, with his custowney courtly manner and without the least appearance of offense or resentment, replied that he could not.

"Because," replied this clown in his own little circus, "the one bears a cross on his breast and the other on his back." The sally, such as it was, was met by the most frigid silence by all the passengers save the archbishop, who smilingly inquired:

"Now, in my turn, Fd like you to tell us the difference between a commercial traveler and an ass?"

As though it were a mystery as deep as the Sphinx the young wit pendered for some time and then gave it up. "I don't see it," he confessed.

"Neither do I," replied the archbishop; "there isn't any."

The smart drummer got off at the next changing of horses .- Washington Star.

The Conversational Circle,

The circle must not be too large. I say nothing of public banquets of strangers. They are a contradiction in terms, Big dinner parties of ill assorted guests also are failures from a conversationist point of view. A fireside, or a table, round if possible, and, say, four or half a dozen gnests, are sufficient. More will break up into separate knots, and fewer mean a tete-a-tete, "I had," says Thosreau, "at Walden three chairs in my house, one for solitude, two for friendship, three for society."
