REPUBLICANS over the country are in good health and generally feeling pretty well.

MRS. JOHN A. LOGAN says that her husband fought in the first battle of Bull Run wearing a plug hat and a Prince Albert coat.

It is lucky for Jerry Simpson that he was not a candidate for congress this year, as his district went 20,000 republican.

ALL parties concede that the campaign of '92 will be the most stubbornly contested and exciting battle that has been held since war times.

THE effort of the administration to introduce the use of corn as a food in European countries should be sanctioned by every loyal American.

It has always been the policy of the republican party to provide as nearly as possible for the home manufacture of all the goods we need, and the extension of the markets for our surplus products.

AN Iowa paper truthfully says: "When republicans are defeated, principle is defeated and good government suffers. When democracy is defeated it is but the defeat of an organization opposed to the republican party."

NEW YORK and Indiana may be counted upon as doubtful states in '92. The republicans can win with the electoral vote of either, while the democrats must have both. The chances of carrying the election are about 9 to 6 in favor of the republicans.

JUDGE POST is now holding his last term of district court at Grand Island. After the first of January he will assume a more responsible position. We are not informed as to what Edgerton is doing. It is probable he is "burning the school-houses and pulling down the churches."

IN Iowa the alliance polled nearly 12,000 votes. As these were drawn from the rural districts—republican strongholds—it is reasonable to conclude that the organization assisted in the defeat of farmers for governor and lieutenant-governor and elected in their stead two lawyers.

CONSIDERABLE rivalry is being engendered between the Sherman and Foraker factions of the republican party in Ohio, relative to the selection of a U. S. senator. While Foraker is conceded to be a representative republican and worthy any office within the gift of the state under ordinary circumstances, it is almost the universal opinion of the press outside of Ohio that it would not only be a misfortune to Ohio, but a public calamity, to retire Senator Sherman at this critical period. There is no doubt that he is the best informed man on the finance question in the senate and the business world, regardless of party affiliations, recognize that his opinions, always honestly expressed, are of the highest value. The result of this contest will be watched with great interest.

We have it upon good democratic authority that the result in Massachusetts was caused by the democratic advocacy of the admission of raw material free of duty. The manufacturers, according to the statements made by several eminent tariff reform editors, are heartily disatisfied with the McKinley bill and desire a modification that will be more in their favor. Perhaps that is true. But if it is, what becomes of the talk about "fat frying" and "magnificent monopolies," and "millionaire manufacturers," and "enriching the poor at the expense of the many?" The democratic orators have been telling us for a year that the McKinley bill was framed in the interest of the manufacturers of the east, and now the democratic editors tell us that it wasn't. It is a little confusing, brethren. You had better get together and compare notes. To have any effect political lies told by the same party should at least be harmonious.—Lincoln Journal.

THE NOVEMBER ELECTIONS.

We believe all conservative men will readily admit that the republican party has made decided gains in the recent election. In the first place it wrested Ohio and Pennsylvania from democratic control. The victory in Pennsylvania may not be termed a victory upon national questions strictly, inasmuch as the canvass was conducted to a great extent on local issues. The contest in Ohio, however, was conducted throughout on national issues. The republicans desired to make the tariff question the paramount issue and accordingly it put forward Maj. McKinley, the recognized leader of the protective policy, and to leave no room for doubt as to its position it placed a strong tariff plank in its platform. The party also declared against the free coinage of silver. The democratic party took a decidedly firm stand for free trade and in order that there be no misunderstanding concerning its position the party declared in favor of an income tax to provide for the running expenses of the government. A strong free coinage plank was also adopted. The campaign throughout was conducted with a degree of ardor on both sides never before exhibited in the state. The greatest apostles of free trade in the country opened their batteries upon the protection strongholds, but they availed nothing in the face of incontrovertible evidences of the wisdom of the protective policy. The election of McKinley by nearly 20,000 plurality and the election of a republican legislature by fifty-two majority, was a complete party victory and a telling and forcible rebuke to the advocates of free trade and free coinage of silver.

In Massachusetts Gov. Russell was elected by a less plurality than he received last year, and the republicans elected the rest of the ticket and regained control of the senate and increased their majority in the house.

In New York the democrats retained control of the governorship. The campaign was waged wholly on local issues and the result has no national significance whatever. The republicans retain control of the legislature.

Maryland, New Jersey, Virginia and Mississippi remain democratic.

In Iowa the fight for the governorship was carried by the democrats, and the republicans increased their majority in the legislature by three. The contest for the governorship was purely local, the question of prohibition being the sole issue. In the legislature, however, the question of the election of a U. S. senator figured prominently and it may be termed a victory for the republican party on national questions.

In Kansas the republicans gained and the alliance lost heavily, indicating that the latter had become tired of the independent move and proposed to cast their lot with the republican party.

Taken as a whole the result of the election is highly gratifying to the republicans and an indorsement of their policy of protection, reciprocity and honest money.

McKINLEY AND THE FUTURE.

The Hon. William McKinley is one of the most eminent men in the republican party. He is able, vigorous, high-minded, old enough for all public honors, and young enough for ambition to rock his hopes with its most irresistible power. In the republican national convention of 1888 he became recognized as one of his party's available statesmen. But for his stalwart virtue the name of the candidate presented before the convention by the Ohio delegation, of which he was chairman, would have been withdrawn and his own offered in its place, with the certainty of powerful support from other quarters. He refused to reach out for honors tendered across his loyalty to the gentleman he had been commissioned to support, and so kept his self-respect and the respect of every citizen of the United States.

Mr. McKinley has just been elected governor of Ohio, the prolific mother of republican presidential candidates, after an issue made directly against himself as the representative of the present tariff policy fastened upon the country through the ambitious folly of Grover Cleveland. The circumstances of his latest success point to him as inevitably a candidate of the first rank before the republican national convention to meet in 1892. And yet as a loyal partisan he must face the by no means trifling possibility of being called upon to stop short of the highest honors and be nominated for vice president upon a ticket headed by the Hon. James G. Blaine. It was Blaine who in no unfriendly spirit gave the slant to the new tariff bill which conferred upon the protective system the offensive and defensive powers that make it to-day reflect so amply the traditional and expectant American sentiment.

Blaine and McKinley would be a republican combination of extraordinary power and quality.—New York Sun.

A FEW democrats of this place who esteem themselves as above the rank and file of the party, in that they were able to control several votes in the democratic convention, realize that they and their methods have been relegated to the rear, by an unmistakable verdict in the hands of the electors, and now they have conceived a plan by which they hope to still maintain control regardless of the wish of the people for whom they propose to labor. It would surely be a delightful position to occupy and honorable in the estimation of the people.

The national republican committee will meet in a few weeks for the purpose of deciding where and when the national republican convention will be held.

The question that will probably be the most difficult to settle will be as to what city will be offered the privilege of entertaining the convention. For the distinction several cities will contest, the most prominent of which are Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Omaha and San Francisco. Among the lot the claims of Omaha will doubtless be pressed and should our metropolis be accorded the distinguished honor there can be no doubt that the convention would be provided for properly.

A GREAT many instances are on record in which, by the aid of protection, the American manufacturer has been enabled to compete with the foreign monopolist and in fact so nearly deprive him of the American trade that he has been compelled to not only reduce the price of the commodity, but actually to remove his plant to this country, thereby escaping the duty and receiving a portion of the American trade. The latest instance of this kind is noted in the Dry Goods Economist of Hartford, Conn., as follows:

"The Frank Wilson Manufacturing Co., with a capital of $50,000, all of which is owned by the gentlemen who have conducted the same business in England, will start up the manufacture of lace curtains within a few days. The Wilsons have an immense business in England, where they employ something like 2,300 persons in their mills at Beeston near Nottingham. Childwell near Nottingham and Borrowash near Derby. Their American trade has grown to such large proportions that within one day recently they made a shipment to this country of over fifty tons of this light material. The desire to retain this trade has led to the establishment of works here, as the present duty made it impossible for them to do otherwise."

In the McKinley bill will have the effect to induce a few more English syndicates to build factories in America, employ American labor and increase the demand for products of the American farm, it will still more grow in popular favor.

THE BRICEVILLE TROUBLE.

The trouble at the Briceville, East Tennessee, mines has ended as every sagacious person foresaw it must. The free miners rebelled against being compelled to work in competition with the state's convicts who had been leased to Calvin S. Brice and his associates, several months ago. The democratic governor of Tennessee sent the state militia to overawe the strikers, and secured quietness by promising to call a special session of the legislature to take action. This was done but the democratic legislature, after discussing the matter, adjourned without taking decisive steps. The free miners have now risen in revolt, captured the stockades at Briceville and Coal Creek, and released over 500 convicts, turning the latter loose upon the community.

Every one must lament mob action of any kind, but it is hard to say that these miners were not far more nearly right than mobs usually are. They had appealed to the state authorities for relief from the injustice of convict competition, and it was only when the democratic legislature had shown that it was controlled by Brice and his millionaire associates that these men took the law into their own hands and relieved themselves, at least temporarily, from the competition of the convicts. It is a severe remedy, but it is to be hoped that it will force the evils of the convict lease system upon the voters of Tennessee and compel a popular movement which will result in its entire abolition.—Toledo Blade.

THE legislation that will be attempted by the democratic house this winter can not fail to place that party on the defensive, in a measure at least, in the campaign of '92. It may be remembered also that the republicans will have nothing to defend, but with the McKinley bill as a weapon, together with the sound doctrine entertained by the party on the money question, a wide and clean swath will be cut through the democratic ranks.

A DEMOCRATIC government signifies a government in which the people rule. The democratic party signifies, evidently, a party in which the people do not rule. We might harmonize the two versions of the democracy, by adding that the republican party signifies a party to protect the rights of the people and see that they shall rule.

THE canvassing board has as yet been unable to decide definitely which party has a majority in the New York legislature. The New York Herald figures it out a tie, but both parties claim a majority. Evidently somebody is mistaken. It will probably remain in doubt a few days yet.

THE democrats are counting with certainty upon the electoral vote of Mississippi in 1892.
