home in Nebraska City from the war. He was still but a boy, and the old restless spirit would not remain quiet. Throwing his pack over his back he started for the far west.

From the day Mr. Wilkinson left his paternal roof until last Monday evening he has not been heard from. Twenty-four years have passed, and his old mother has not known whether her son was to be mourned as dead or to be hoped for as still living. But Monday evening Mr. Wilkinson, now a man of years, with a sprinkiing of gray in his hair and beard, arrived in the city. He had hardly reached the avenue before he met some of his old family, among them Councilman Faunce.

Mr. Wilkinson says he has been living in Portland, Oregon, for some years. He has never heard from his old home, and at length decided to come back and see those who still remain. He is in prosperous circumstances, and all rejoice over the long hoped for reunion.-Nebraska City Press.

Blizzards in the Northwest

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 9.-There has been raging here today the worst blizzard for years. Today a howling gale with heavy drifting snow was reported from Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakotas, and to night the blizzard continues with unabated fury, while the mercury away down. Business has been practically suspended throughout the northwest, schools, street car service in this city and elsewhere closed, trains are delayed or abandoned, and a general paralysis of everything has resulted. Several trains were abandoned or held in unprotected localities because the officials feared they would be blown from the track if started out in the blizzard. Communication has been cut off to a large extent by wire. The weather bureau announces that the storm will probably continue until tomorrow night.

his home. An examination showed the bullet had struck his forehead an inch above the eye, fracturing the skull, and lodging on the outer table of the scalp just under the scalp. The ball was removed and a small piece of bone taken from the wound. The judge was conscious and bore the ordeal bravely. He vomited quite freely, which Dr. Paine attributes to the nervous shock. Although his condition is critical, the physicians entertain hopes of his recovery,

Charles Warner, the would-bemurderer, is a man of forty-seven years, above the medium height, with a short cropped black beard and mustache. His features bear a resemblance to those of Guiteau, President Garfield's assassin, and his demeanor and conversation are similar to those of the noted murderer. He has lived in Lincoln for more than a year and boarded at the Peoria house. On October 15 last he was arrested for disorderly conduct at Sanders' saloon and fined $1 and costs. He paid the fine, but hung around the police station for several days afterwards and demanded the money back. His actions all through were those of a crank. He was arrested again last Thursday for attempting to steal a shirt at Goldwater's pawnshop, which he claimed belonged to him. On Saturday Judge Borgelt fined him $1 and costs, which he paid. Warner has brooded over this ever since, claiming that it was robbery and declaring that he would wreak vengeance on the judge, but little attention was paid to his ravings. When he was
