This convention unanimously congratutates Mr. Bryan on his remarkably successful career as the member from this district of the national house of representatives. and it especially commends his gallant and brilliant advocacy of the great cause of tariff reform, so vital to both producer and consumer of the west. The convention assures Mr. Bryan of the confidence and support of the democracy of this

This convention instructs the delegates to the national democratic convention to use the utmost endeavor to secure the nomination of Grover Cleveland for president and should this be found impracticable then to stand for the choice of western man.

Congressman Bryan's candidacy as a delegate at large to the national convention was endorsed.

The B. & M. bridge across the Missouri river at Nebraska City had a narrow escape from destruction yesterday. The State Journal says: 'A fire was discovered on the B. & a time it threatened to destroy the trestle work leading to the bridge, but ready assistance reduced the flames after a stubborn fight of about two hours. The driveway approach was destroyed for several rods, but it is thought the railway was not sufficiently damaged to stop trains. It Is Often Carried on the Upper Decks of Steamships to Keep It Cool. Ammonia has been carried in considerable quantities on the upper decks of steamships, but in many vessels the bottles, carboys, or tins are stowed in the between decks. In fact, they are some times stowed in vacant cabins of cargo vessels. The explosion of one of theme receptacles awakened attention to the placing of such substances dangerously near heat. The master of the vessel on whose ship the explosion happened unscrewed the tops of all those undamaged. and thus allowed the gas to blow oif

Restrictions on carriage of dangerous goods were imposed under the merchant shipping act, 1873, section 23 of which provides that if any person sends or at-tempts to send by, or, not being the master or owner of the vessel, carries or attempts to carry in any vessel, British or foreign, any dangerous goods, such as aquafortis, vitriol, naphtha, gunpowder, lucifer matches, nitroglycerin, petroleum, or any other goods of a dangerous nature, without distinctly marking their nature on the outside of the packages containing the same, and also giving written notice of the nature of such goods and the name and address of the sender, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding £100; but if the person sending the goods on board is merely an agent and ignorant of its contents, the penalty is not to exceed ten pounds.

False description makes the sender liable to a penalty of £500. The master or owner of a ship may refuse to take on board a vessel any suspicious package, and may require it to be opened to ascertain its contents. Clause 26 in the act has always been looked upon as a mis-take in legislation. The master of a ship is empowered to throw overbeard goods of a dangerous nature which have been sent without being marked or notified of their true character, and neither M. bridge over the Missouri river the master nor the owner of the vessel last evening about 10 o'clock. For shall be subject to any liability for such casting into the sea, civil or criminal, in any court. There is no reason for denouncing the carriage of ammonia by sea, but it is of the greatest importance that each special compound should be accurately defined, and that it ought not to be exposed to heat. If everything that expanded on submission to heat were interdicted, the been broken and hoops burst from exposure to the sun, although no material damage is done. We could name other breakages, but enough has been urged to bring home the necessity for understanding what to carry and where to stow it.—Chemical Trade Journal.

Danger in Physical Culture. It is beginning to be understood that physical culture should be undertaken intelligently and with moderation. A London girl went home from her first lesson, which was a violent one, and discovered a strange condition of her neck a little at one side of the throat-a mottled appearance, with settled blood beneath. The physician to whom she applied said there was no remedy; some little blood vessels had given way under the severe and unaccustomed exercise and her naturally thin skin revealed the mishap more than would perhaps happen in another case. The injuries are not so frequent to young girls, with supple joints and easily moved muscles and tendons, but middle aged women should begin very carefully. Many such, to rid themselves of an unbecoming tendency to corpulence, take to extraordinary acrobatic feats not unattended with real danger to persons unaccustomed to violent exercise.-Her Point of View in New York Times.

The Mysterious Power of the Turquoise. The turquoise, although not credited with either remedial or protective properties, so far as disease was concerned, was revertheless regarded as a kind of was revertheless regarded as a kind of sympathetic indicator, the intensity of INFORMATION AS TO RATES its color being supposed to fluctuate with the health of the wearer.

The latter, however, by virtue of the stone he carrried, could, it was said, fall from any height with impunity. The Marquis of Vilena's fool, however, was somewhat nearer the truth when he reversed the popular superstition in his assertion that the wearer of a turquoise might fall from the top of a high tower and be dashed to pieces without breaking the stone.-Queries Magazine.

Agassiz taught natural history in Harvard college as no other man had taught in America before. He was "the best friend that ever student had," because the most genial and kindly.
