The Missouri Pacific Now Runs Trains to Omaha.

NO CHANGE IN THE TIME CARD

New Station on the Road Between Omaha and Union--A Rich Country Along the Line

—A Woman Station Agent

The World-Herald has the following to say concerning the new short line, which was opened yesterday for the first time, having a reporter on the train that made this trip:

The Missouri Pacific short line between this city and Union, which lessens the distance on the Gould road by twenty miles between Omaha and Nebraska City, Kansas City and St. Louis, and gives this metropolis a second line to Fort Crook and to Plattsmouth, was opened to regular trains yesterday.

A month or so will elapse, however, before the fast through trains will run over the short line. In the meantime the new track will be made smooth and the crossing signals perfected.

The through passenger trains by the short cut will then forgo the use of Jay Gould's personal road—the Omaha Belt railway—and local trains between Omaha and Auburn will traverse the Belt and serve the people at Portal, Weeping Water, Talmage and other stations on the old line.

Starting from the Union depot at Tenth street, the route for the short cut is along the Union Pacific tracks past South Omaha, with its views of enlarging packing, and past Avery, with its brick yard that is eating a hole in the clay foreground to a junction a third of a mile south of Gilmore.

At this point, known as Gilmore Junction, the Burlington road short cut between South Omaha and La Platte Junction, leaves the Union Pacific track to hug the western bounds of Fort Crook and join the river line of the Burlington about four miles below, midway between Bellevue and La Platte.

A few rods west of Gilmore Junction the Missouri Pacific short cut starts from the Union Pacific and parallels the Burlington short cut, the two tracks being about 100 feet apart.

A mile and a half south of the junction a grove of tall cottonwood around a spring marks the northwest corner of Fort Crook reservation, a string of cures with material for its sewers and water mains stands on a siding and trenches are dug beyond it to the ridge, on which the officers' quarters are to stand.

The train speeds southward through billows of green sward and grain and ridges crested with foliage across the Papillion, past the rendering works and pulls up at La Platte, a station a block south of the Burlington's station of that same name. Soon it crosses the muddy and sluggish Platte on a bridge built with three iron truss spans over the channel, pile spans beyond and rip-rap and willows planted along the approaches.

A little stretch south of the Platte there is a long line of cables, rods and signal posts guarding the crossings of the Missouri Pacific and the Burlington main line from Pacific Junction. The operator in the signal tower will control twenty levers and the safety and interlocking switches and signals are perfection.

A quarter-mile each side of the crossing a semaphore extends a warning red arm above the track for the engineer who is to stop. If he does not heed it a warning red gate drops across the track. But he will not reach the gate, for at a distance of two telegraph poles from the crossing, a derailing switch will throw his engine off the track and prevent it from crashing into the train which has the right of way and his crossing.

Passing the crossing the road cuts through rough bluffs and enters Plattsmouth in the west part of the city, about a mile from the Missouri. It has a separate passenger and freight depot station there.

There is no rust to rub off the rails below Plattsmouth for the new road there has been operated since September.

Two and a half miles south of Plattsmouth is Mynard station, a new and attractive place, boasting of an elevator and stock yards.

Four miles south of Mynard a dark-eyed 3-year-old boy looks out of the station window as an engine and a single car pulls up to switch and he asks: "Is zis ye pay car?"

No, it isn't the pay car, my boy, but it looks like it. Friends of the late Frank Drake readily recognize the handsome boy as his; there is no mistaking the likeness. And presently the agent, neatly gowned in gray, with white apron, comes out. The station was Mrs. Drake's choice rather than a place in a city railway office, for she was familiar with railway work, and she preferred a station that she might have her children beside her and enjoy country air. She manages it most capably and it does by far the most business of any of the new stations on the road. There are two elevators and a stock yard at Murray. The town has two churches and is a pleasant one.

A rolling country, checked with hedgerows and cropping out here and there with ledges of stone, lies between Murray and the next station, Union, which is the junction with the old main line. Union was farm land until the road came, but now a village of 300 souls, with three churches, a two-story school house, two elevators and two hotels is perched on a knoll.

Below Murray is Wyoming, situated in General Van Wyck's own domain, and then comes Nebraska City, best known to travelers as the site of the distillery, the cereal mill and the Hotel Watson.

For the present the short line train runs between this city and Union, backs to the Webster street depot, but this is only a temporary arrangement to pound the track down hard.

Supreme Court Decisions.

Everett vs. Tidball & Fuller, error from Cass county, affirmed. Opinion by Chief Justice Maxwell.

Under section 372 of the code the deposition of a witness may be used only in the following cases: "1. When the witness does not reside in the county where the action or proceeding is pending, or is sent for trial by a change of venue or is absent therefrom. 2. When, from age, infirmity or imprisonment, the witness is unable to attend the court, or is dead. 3. When the testimony is required upon a motion, or in any other case where the oral examination of a witness is not required."

2. When a deposition is offered to be read in evidence, it must appear to the satisfaction of the court, that for any cause specified in section 372, the attendance of the witness cannot be procured. If the witness is openly within the county at the time of the trial and is not prevented by age, infirmity or imprisonment from appearing in court, his deposition cannot be substituted for his personal presence to give testimony if the adverse party object to such deposition.

3. Where no objection is made in the motion for a new trial and the verdict is excessive, the objection cannot be considered for the first time in the supreme court.

4. A draft payable to the order of the payee and endorsed in blank by him and delivered to a third party is thereafter like a negotiable instrument payable to bearer, and the title will pass by mere delivery.

Loder vs. Loder, appeal from Cass county, affirmed. Opinion by Chief Justice Maxwell.

In an action to set aside a deed made by a father in his dotage to his youngest son, held, that the testimony tended to show undue influence on the part of the son and that the father was not in a mental condition to transact important business.

2. The judgment is supported by the weight of evidence and is affirmed.

Connor vs. Draper. Error from Cass county. Affirmed. Opinion by Mr. Justice Norval.

"Where, in an action tried to jury, there is evidence to sustain the verdict the supreme court will not set it aside and grant a new trial because the bare preponderance of the evidence seems to be against the verdict.

Held that the instructions fairly submitted the issue to the jury.

When documentary evidence is excluded on the trial, the same must be incorporated in the bill of exceptions in order that this court may review the rulings of the trial court thereon.

W. H. Bolin vs. Coon Valley was on trial before Judge Archer this morning. The case was taken under advisement. Bolin contracted to work for Valley for three months, but quit before his contract expired. He now brings suit for wages for the time contract calls for.
