Oddities of Washington Life,

I have been trying to get to the funny part for a long time, and, although there are a lot of interesting things swimming in my mind, I am going to put them aside and return to my saddle of mutton. Let us suppose, Mr. Editor, that you are a sexator or representative (O, no, that won't do, but-), let us suppose you are a cabinet officer, or on the supreme court bench. You are popular (of course) and sought for and invited to every swell table. On Monday you have a lovely dinner at Socretary Molar's. When you dine with Senator Incisor on Tuesday, you are surprised that you have precisely the same dinner that you had the day before. On Wednesday you are at Judge Woolsack's—the same old dinner again, with, possibly, the same china, the same flower stands, and the same waiters—beyond a doubt the same waiters ers. By the time you get to Representative OFFICE—In the Union Block, front rooms, second story, south. Prompt attention given to waiters, the same soup, the same fish, the same fillet, the same old miserable sweet breads and pass, the same form of ice cream, and the same cheese and crackers, you begin to feel like the professional quail eater. Of course Crutchet was not the only caterer in Washington. There were and there are others. But their dinners are about the same thing. A regular old, seasoned diner out can tell the min-ute he sits down to the table who is the caterer. I happen to know a case in point. One caterer in the city, a very good one he is, too, has gold plated forks and spoons. The newly elected senator imagines he is creating a sensation by setting before his gueste gold forks and spoons, whereas Senator Anthony and a dozen others smile inwardly and remember that they have been eat ing with those very focks and spoons for ten years at least, and he knows every waiter by his first name. This is Washington society. Is it not, after all, betier to give your guests a good home-cooked dinter, with less style, but more good wine and more good, hearty home bospitality?

Literary, fuquisitive and Gastronomic.

Remington Youge in Demorest's Monthly. An amusing story is told by Dr. Gulich of a company of missionaries on one of the Micronesian islands, i., the Pacific ocean. After having been left a year without tidings from home, they heard that a mail had arrived for them on one of the neighboring islands. They them on one of the neighboring islands. A big bundle of mall matter-letters and papers from American friends was brought forward. According to Polynesian eliquette, presents were given to the chiefs, a long conversation followed, and elaborate ceromonies of politeness were performed. But unfortunately, the woman to be able citts were too valuable. The chiefs, being for herself, not be of the calculation of any that she may stand other sex, but simply independence.

Man Who Went to One.

Baby Ballot, Jury-Box, Pill-Bage and Pulpit.

Ida A. Harper in Terre Hante Mail. A lady reader of The Mail has propounded some very solemn questions "bearing on woman's rights," which should be considered before granting the ballot to the sex. After several sleepless nights of anxiety, the followmg answers have suggested themselves:

I. "Is it a man's duty or a woman's to quiet a cross baby at midnighty Obviously a woman's because after having taken care of it all day, she knows how it ought to be done at night; and besides, being of a strong, robust constitution, she can bear fatigue and loss of sleep better than he can, and, as men are delieate and susceptible to cold, they should not be permitted to get out of bed after they are carefully tucked in for the night; then, too, as the entire peace of the family depends upon keeping the husband in good humor, it is the part of wisdom not to disturb his slumbers. Between a cross man and a cross baby the choice is in favor of the baby. Everybody knows that women are auxious to have just as many babies as possible, and the men should not feel under any obligations whatever to assist in the care of thora.

2. If a woman casts her first ballot at twenty mue, will if he possible for her to conceal herage after that " When a woman has some other aim and ambition in life besides getting married, she will not desire to conceal her size, and when men look for some attributes in a wife besides mere beauty of face and agure, she will not feel that her powers of attraction are growing less with ever passing

3. "Could any twelve women on a jury agree on a verdict?" Just as well as twelve men, but when that day shall come, it is to be hoped that it will not be possible to find twelve women who are ignorant enough to be eligible for a jury.

4. "Could a woman keep professional secrets?" The Nihilists in Russis, the Communists in France, requiring the most terrible secrecy, number many women among their leaders. Almost every city has its women lawyers, or doctors; we have two excellent lady physicians here. Has anybody ever known of their betraving professional secrets?

5. "Could any man get an office if his mother-in-law took a hand in politics?" If that much abused mother-in-law had a vote herself and controlled several more and could influence a number of others, her sou-in-law with political aspirations, would treat her with a deference and affection that it is safe to say, she will ence and affection that it is safe to say, she will never receive under any other circumstances.

6. "Could a woman physician prescribe for a handsome man without falling in love with him?" Well, of all the tiresome, unattractive, disagreeable people on the face of the earth, a sick man carries off the palm, with his groaning and complaining and bewailing and swearing—why, if you want completely to disenchant a woman just let for see the object of her devotion with a spei, of the bilious fever or a boil on the back of his neck. One don't disented on the back of his neck. O, no, don't disqualify the lady doctors on this account. The sick men are perfectly safe.

7. "Could a woman preacher hope to win
the hearts of her fellow-sisters if her winter bonnet were prettier than theirs?" If she didn't wear her bonnet in the pulpit it probably wouldn't make any difference, but if the lady ministers are not paid any better than those of the opposite sex there is not much danger that they would be conspicuous by the elegance of their winter bonnets.

8. "If women are to be the bread-winners and salary-earners of the family, how much pin-money ought they allow the husbands?" Give them a few dollars, and when that is gone let them humbly come and ask for more, and, after they have given a faithful account of what they did with every cent, hand them a little more with the injunction to "make that go as far as possible, for money is scarce." That is the way most wives get their pin-

That is the way most wives get their pinmoney.

9. If womanhood is to be elevated to the dignity of manhood can women get along without kissing each other as well as men do?"

This is something that deflet all guessing. Men have many opportunities for working off the superfluous osculation, which are denied to women. They can kiss the cook in the pantry, the chambermaid behind the door, every pretty girl who will permit it, and their neighbor's wife if she is willing. Women have only the one stupid, uninteresting, legitimate privilege—that of kissing one another.

10. "When woman is put on a footing with man, won't it be perfectly proper that she should foot the bills for ice cream, oysters, theatre tickets, etc., for herself and parmer?" Not at all; they can do just as they do now, each party pay for himself. The young man of to-day doesn't bankrupt himself huying ice cream, oysters, and theatre tickets for the girls. In several localities in the city, the young

THE "MUM" SOCIABLE,

Peck's Sun.

"Lend me your revolver," said a young man with his nose skinned, his eyes blackened and his white necktic around under his ear, and one tail of his dress-coat torn off, as he came into a west side saloon with his overcoat on his arm and his overshoes in his hand, and his clothes all covered with snow.

"What's the matter with you," said the bartender, looking ugly at him; "do you supposa body, and then be arrested for being an accessory. Not much! But what's the matter? You look as though you came out of a window Was anything the matter with the door?"

The young man took a wet towel and sopped the blood from his nese, then went to a mirror and fixed his neck tie and turned his back and looked into the glass to see if the absent coat-tail showed much, then went and leaned on the bar and looked at the bar tender for a moment, and said:

"You look like a man that can be trusted. and whose advice would be safe to follow in an emergency, and I will tell you about this murder that I contemplate, and may be you can give me some points, as you have no doubt murdered many people. The trouble is right here. Our lodge a to give a 'mum social' this evening. You know what a mum social is. Young people go to a house and sit around all the evening and keep their mouths shut, and never say a word till a signal is given, then they all make up for lost time and talk for all that is ogt. (Is my nose bleeding vet; Thanks.) They wanted me to go, and I just came from there. That is, I came from the house next door. You see, I went to the wrong house and rung the bell. A man in his shirt-sleeves came to the door and said "good evening;" but I wasn't going to be caught speaking, because you have to pay a forfeit if you speak. So I just walled right in and pulled off my overcoat and hung it up, and pulled off my overcoat and hung it up, and hung my hat on the hat rack. The man looked a little bit annoyed, but he asked me if the weather was not softening up a little. I smiled but didn't say anything, and I walked into the sitting-room. I thought I was the first one there, and I felt very awkward. The man watched me pretty close, and finally he said I had the advantage of him, and I smiled again, but didn't say anything. Now that I think of it, I noticed that he unbuttoned his shirt sleeves and began to roll them up. I did not think of it at the time, but his arms were as big as my legs. He asked me to what circumstance he was indebted for the honor of this visit, and I though he was trying to get me off my guard so I debted for the honor of this visit, and I though he was trying to get me off my guard so I would speak, when they would have the laugh on me; so I smiled one of my best two-for quarter smiles, and looked at him as much as to say, 'You can't play any of your games on the undersigned.' I think he was the crossess man that I ever saw, and I wondered what made the committee have the mum sociable at his house. I thought it was time some of the rest of the rest of the crowd were coming, and I got up and went to the window to look out, when the man came up beside me and hissed in my ear, 'What is your little game, any way,' Well, I wasn't going to spak, and give myself away, so I looked at him sort of impudent, as much as to say, 'O, go and chase yourself around your feet,' and then I thought lightning had struck me. He took me by the throat with one hand, and and then I thought lightning had struck me. He took me by the throat with one hand, and by the vicinity of the coat-tail with the other hand, and he cheked me so my tongue run out and his wife screamed and said Don't kill him,' and the man hustled me out into the hall, and opened the front door, and he picked me up bodily and threw me out into a snow-bank five feet deep. I struggled a little going out of the door, and run my nose against the door casing, and I guess he forgot to let go of my coat-tail when I went out. I struck head-first coat fail when I went out. I struck head-first in the snow, and before I could dig my head out the door closed, and I could not explain my conduct to the man. I was so mad I could my conduct to the man. I was so mad I could not have explained any way. Just as I got out of the snow-bank and shook myself the door opened and the man threw out my overcoat and hat and overshoes, and he told his wife to hurry up with the shot-gun, and he would take me on the fly as I went over the fence. Well, I didn't wait for no shot-gun, but grabbed my coat and things and came down the grabbed my coat and things and came down the street on a gallop. I met a lot of the young people going up, and as I turned the corner I saw them going into the next house to the one that I visited, and that was the first I knew of my mistake. Now, what I want is for you to tell me whether I better shoot that man or kill him with a club. I was raised in the south and my warm southern blood will not stand any such treatment. The bar-tender laughed and old the young fellow he had better go and apologize to that man, or he would kick the other coat a if off the first time he saw him, and the young man said on second thought he reckened he would.

YOUNG MEN

Who have become victims of solitary vice, that dreadful and destructive habit which annually sweeps to an untimely grave thousands of young men of exalted talent and brilliant intellect who might otherwise entrance listening senators with the thunders of their cloquence or waken to ecstacy the living lyre, may call with confidence.

MARRIAGE.

Married persons or young men contemplating marriage beware of physical weakness. Loss of procreative power, impotency or any other disqualification speedily relieved. He who places himself under the care of Dr. Fishblatt may religiously confide in his notor as a gentleman, and confidently rely upon his skill as a physician

ORGANAL WEAKNESS

Immediately cared and full vigor restored. This distressing affection, which renders life a barden and marriage impossible, is the penalty payed by the victim for improper indulgence. Young men are apt to commit excesses from not being aware of the dreadful consequences that may ensue. Now who that understands this subject will deny that procreation is lost sooner by these falling tate improper habits than by the prudent. Besides being deprived of the pleasures of healthy offsprings, the most serious and destructive symptoms of both mind and body arise. The system becomes deranged, the physical and mental powers weaken. Lost procreative powers, nervous gratability, dyspepsia, paipitation of the heart, indigestion, constitutional debuity, wasting of the frame, cough consumption and death.
