SOUTHERN GROWTH.

The South Leads in Making Cotton Goods. An Industrial Revolution - The Southern People Asserting the Supremacy Which Nature Advantages Give Them.

Frank Wilkinson in N. Y. Sun. It is not generally known in the north that the cotton manufacturing industry of the southern states has, through skillful management and the improvement of every natural advantage, reached a point where it cannot only compete with the products of northern mills in southern markets, but now exports the products of the New England mills out of the Mississippi valley.

The economic truth that the mills should be surrounded by cotton fields is, at last, realized by all intelligent men. Throughout the cotton states, at each point where the water power is unfulfilled and easily improved, or where fuel is cheap and abundant, mills are in the course of erection, or if not being built, the question of building is agitated and subscription papers are circulated. I am pleased to say that wherever I have been in the cotton states the men were talking of investing southern capital in the manufacturing of cotton goods.

Use of goods. This is undeniably true: the fine goods in the north will produce equally fine goods in the south, and the southern people are fully as intelligent as those of England. When the demand is made on the southern manufacturers for a fine quality of goods they will surely supply it, and supply it cheaper than any northern mill.

PETER COOPER. Give honor and love forever more! To great man gone to rest; Peace on the dim Platonian shores, Rest in the land of the blest.

I reckon him greater than man That ever drew sword in war; I reckon him nobler than King or Khan; Braver and better by far.

And wisest he in this whole wide land Of hoarding till bent and gray; For all you can hold in your cold dead hand Is what you have given away.

So, whether to wander the stars on to rest Or to live in the world, I care not; He gave with zest and he gave his best And deserves the best to come.

Stage Reminiscence of Lincoln. Washington Letter. In referring to President Lincoln, Mr. Raymond, who was a member of the stock company at Ford's theater during Mr. Lincoln's first term, said:

"Mr. Lincoln would often come down there at night and sit in the office. He would come in, sit for an hour or chat, and very often go through the stage entrance into his box, sit there quietly and unmoved, see the performance and then go back home. He always extended himself to the point of exhaustion, and himself to take a hour of recreation at the theater. The characteristics of the man were so noble, so simple and grand. He seemed to enjoy, when he came to the theater, his freedom from business and cares of state. I remember one night when he was sitting in the box, and he was talking to a friend who was sitting next to him. He was talking to a friend who was sitting next to him. He was talking to a friend who was sitting next to him.

The danger that threatens the New England manufacturers is imminent. The signs clearly indicate that they are to be forced into a competition with an established and active industry, as she leads in all things political or material; but all the southern states are making healthy progress.

Out of the system of African slavery arose a belief in, and a practice of, paying low wages in the south. Free white men could not successfully compete in the labor market with black slaves. In endeavoring to do so, it was necessary for them to adopt the coarse, cheap food used by the negroes, and to wear cheap clothes, and it was imperatively necessary for them to accept the rates of wages that were customary in hiring slaves from their owners.

This condition of affairs produced a race of poor whites in the southern states, who were not only poor, but they were also ignorant. They were not only poor, but they were also ignorant. They were not only poor, but they were also ignorant.

MEDICAL PROGRESS.

The Collective Investigation of Disease. An English Movement Which will be Watched with Interest - The Summing up of Physicians' Experience.

New York Sun. The movement lately begun in England, and described as the "collective investigation of disease," is likely, should its design become fully developed, to have a very important bearing upon the welfare of the human race.

The study of vital statistics, misleading as it often is, cannot tell us of its causes, course, or amenable to treatment in its earlier stages. The records of hospital observation, indeed, furnish invaluable studies of disease as seen in life, yet the great facts concerning its origin and its course, and particularly the after results of the hospital treatment, are, for the most part, extremely meagre and unsatisfactory.

The plan adopted by the committees in charge, as stated by Sir William W. Gull, to draw up a memorandum of the several subjects of inquiry, and to issue cards of questions concerning particular diseases. These cards are to be answered by the physicians to whom they are sent, and returned to the committees for tabulation and record.

The immediate result of this comprehensive method of inquiry will be, of course, to place considerable portions of the existing accumulations of pathological knowledge, now hidden in private practices, within the reach of exhaustive investigation.

In its present form the movement is due to the suggestions of Dr. Mahomed, ally advocate of the British Medical Association. He received the strong impulse which gives it its present hopeful status from a recent conference of physicians at Birmingham. Already fifty-four committees have been organized, and nearly one thousand of the chief practitioners of Great Britain are pledged to the work. Memoranda have thus far been issued upon pneumonia, rheumatism, consumption, and diarrhoea, and other cards of inquiry will follow as soon as advisable.

This movement places medical investigation directly and immediately under the searching light of modern scientific methods. Its scope is broad and comprehensive, and it not only has the support of such men as Sir James Paget, Sir William W. Gull and other physicians of equal eminence, but it is sustained by the whole power of the British Medical Association, with its 10,000 members. The bringing to bear of so tremendous a force upon a single object of inquiry, is, of course, a most powerful influence upon the future of medicine.

Dr. Gull, in a recent address before the Metropolitan committee branch of the British Medical Association, said:

"The whole sympathies of my life are with this movement. To rightly ask questions of nature is the highest science of the intellect. It is a faith in the intellect. It is a faith in the intellect.

Dr. Paget said:

"As the chief design of this collective inquiry is to bring into the fields of knowledge all that may be gained in practice by family and general practitioners, I would not hesitate to name the knowledge, which may be so joined as likely to lead to the very highest scientific knowledge, and even to the solution of the most difficult problems in pathology that can be set before us."

Epoch has been said to show the weight and significance of this movement. It may relations to modern science and human happiness, and the solid benefits likely to accrue from it, will reach their apex when you have read thoughtful minds to watch the progress of the investigation with lively interest.

Match demands, of course, upon the use to be made of the knowledge which will thus be accumulated. But in the modern condition of the mental and physical forces, facts easily fall into their proper places, and are not unlikely in this case to be enlarged into a science whose comprehensive scope, Hippocrates himself could not have foreseen, although the method underlying it is but an elaboration of his own.

About the Goslin. The goslin is the old female goose's young child. They are mostly white all over, and as soft as a ball of worsted. Their feet is wove whole, and they can swim as easy as a drop of kaster oil on the water. They are born annually about the 15th of May, and never was known to die naturally. If a man should tell me he had saw a goslin die, I would not believe him under oath after that, not even if he swore he had died after seeing a goslin die. The goslin are different in one respect from the human family, who are said to grow weaker, but wiser; whereas a goslin always grows tuffer and more plumpish. I have seen a goslin that said was ninety-three years old last June, and he didn't look an hour older than a goslin that was seven years old.

The goslin waddles when he walks and paddles when he swims, but he never dies like a duck, out of sight, and as soft as a ball of worsted. Small Fruits in the West. The farmers of new states at the west pay more attention to small fruits than do those of the east, probably because they know that small fruits come quickly into bearing. As a result, they are planting more of them, and they are in large sections last year, western farmers had more fruit than many at the east.

Wheat in India. The London Economist says: "It is beyond all doubt that India has enormous capabilities as a wheat-producing country, and the contention of those who have investigated the matter is that she can produce much more cheaply than America."

New York News: The new Capitol at Albany can be finished for $1,000,000. Well, let us have it, and some day when it is finished, and both houses are in session let some taxpayer go up and kick the foundation from under it, and the money will have been well invested.

Sanitary inspectors of Paris lately stumbled over an establishment, whose operators were busily engaged in manufacturing ground accurs and burned wheat into a stiff paste used for stumps, stamped into coffee beans. These were then colored with an alcoholic solution of cochineal, "to give them a rich Mocha color," and packed in bags for sale.
