Fifth Avenue Falace. New York Morning Journal. Alone in her nurble palace lives the widow of A. T. Stewart. His remains, which are supposed to be resting beneath the magnificent mausoleum of Gardon City, are scarcely more seehuled than is the personality of Mrs. The greater portion of the Stewart mansion is closed, dust gathers upon its painting and furniture, its blinds of white and gold shut out the exterior view, and save a small suite of rooms on the western corner the mansion is practically deserted. There is something touching in her splendid isolation within call of the fashion, care, elegance and bustling activity of a restless social world. A hady with vilvery gray hair, whose features are still charly cut, and hear the evidences of refinement, is Mrs. Stewart. Her eyes are yet dediramed. She stoops alightly: She is of kindly presence, although her features bear the mases of much suffering, and a habitual sterumess of expression settles upon her features when in repose. Her face, when lit up with the interest of a passing

Mrs. Stewart was in her prime. With the aid of a silver critich handled cane she can get about fairly. But there are times when services of her personal attendant are much in request. Mrs. Second is a woman of method. When able she tizes by 10 o'clock, and breakfasts manify alone. Her tasks are few and modest, and her rich but simple breakfast equipage the old-fushioned meal of tea, dry tonst, and so no light, easily digested food, as chicken or fish. Wines she rarely touches,

"Had I only known before," Whispered he, "What a cure you had in store!" "You'd have suffered all the more; Men are foolish things," said she.

The Country Club. Boston Letter.

Within a few months Boston has awakened to the fact that some general rendezvous was required, some place where propie could see each other in a free, easy, unconstrained, and unconventional way, a thing not easy always to do in cities of medium size. So measures were set on foot, and the institution known as "The Country Club" formed. Some hundreds of the more prominent gentlemen subscribed, a beautiful estate, once the countryseat of some local magnate, was purchased and the results have proved most satisfactory in every particular. The club is situated One of her favorite pastimes, peculiar to, many old people, is to includge in the luxury of having her hair brushed. Her silver braids takes one over the "mill-dam," so called, and takes one over the "mill-dam," so called, and through parts of the pretty town of Brookhas added to, rather than detracted from the line, so there is nothing lost in getting there, glory of her bair. This operation usually as all is attractive, and the roads good from the start. On arriving, one notices that the gateway is as unassuming and unpre-tentious as the entrance to any gentleman's country seat. The approach to the house is a slight incline, and winds some-what, and after a five minutes' drive brings you to the door of the mansion itself-a solid, square, and old-fashioned edifice, which latter attribute the committee of arrangements have been at some pains to retain. The rooms open into each other prottily, and are charmingly fitted up, according to the prevailing style, with high wood-carved fire places, soft-colored draperies, stained-glass windows, etc. The parlors on the right are rooms intended for the use of the lady visitors, and this is one charming and, to some of us, an indispensable feature of the club. Ladies are at liberty to come and go as they please, of course with

Actors at Last Fully Recognized in

France. Paris Telegram, May 10. Actors have at length attained a position of perfect equality with other citizeus. Since the revolution no actor has been dealed Christian burial, in case of refusal to promise, if he recovered, to abjure the stage. Samion and Renier received the cross of the Legion of Honor, but on condition of retiring from their profession. Seveste was decorated for defending Paris in 1870, but he was then mortally wounded. Got was decorated, two years ago, but the decree studiously ignored the fact of his being an actor. It described him as a professor of declamatian at the Couservatoire, and it was there that the riband was handed to him. It remained for M. Ferry to take the last step in the path of emancipation. On Friday night he went to the Comedia Francaise, and between two of the acts sent for Delannay to a private room, where he not only decorated him, but pressed him to abandon his design of retiring, Delannay, who was on the eve of going through his principal characters, by way of farewell to the stage, could not resist such blandishment. He, too, is a professor at the Conservatoire; but the decree this time contains the words, "Societaire de la Comedie Francaise," and mentions his professorship as a secondary qualification. How he was overwhelmed with congratulations may be imagined, and the performance must have been interrupted, had he not been rescued

Any bright day at 5 o'clock or there-about one can find a balf-dozen acquaintances chatting, drinking their afternoon tea, and chatting, drinking their afternoon tea, and generally amused and amusing. Dining clubs are formed (for the house is opened during the winter as well as in summer-time) and a dozen or more ladies and gentlemen agree to dine together every fortnight perhaps through electroscope, which accomple the season. At a recent dinner the writer was much struck by the nice appointments of everything. The round table, the lovely flowers, perfectly arranged, lights and admirably chosen chet made up a most attractive whole. Out of doors everything is even more pleas-ing. A race-course at some little distance from the house is used for flat-races, but the more exciting sport lies in the hurdle-racing. Gentlemen jockeys ride exclusively, and en-ter their own horses. Mr. Dana would make an excellent president, much better than some we have had, and very likely better than the one who will next assume the chair, no matter what his name. But to be president of the United States and editor of The Sun at the same time is too much to expect of one man; and in order to become the one Mr. Dana must cease to be the other. This would be asking too great a sacrifice, both of Mr. Dana himself and of the countless readers of the paper over which he presides. Almost any good square man of ordinary intelligence, medium education, and fity physical health will do for president of the United States; but there is not one man The Sun.

As Told by the Hero. Macon Telegraph.

The following is an extract from a letter written from Texas by a young man formerly of Macon to a friend here: "The other night I went into a saloon where there were eight cowboys who had just got in from a long drive. They crowded around me and asked me to set 'em up. Just out of politeness I set 'em up. When they got through they weapons and gave them to the bar-keeper, and in ten minutes I had whipped all eight of them. They saw that I wasn't to be fooled with and we shook hands. Every time I meet a cowboy now he takes off his hat to me.'

Novel Fire Alarm.

London Times. Suffocation while asleep is a great danger to be guarded against. Smoke rapidly causes the temperature to rise. A wire fixed in a thermometer at, say 80 deg. Fahr., in connection with a small electric battery and bell. will cause the latter to ring violently on the mercury being driven up by the rise of the temperature, touching the wire, and thus completing the circuit. Such a contrivance, simple and inexpensive, if placed in a hotel, would give the necessary alarm; while if the bell were fixed outside warehouses, etc., left unprotected at night, before the fire therein could possibly attain any serious proportions, the ringing of the bell would attract the no tice of passers-by, but especially the police, whose co-operation in the matter of the protection of life and property from fire cannot be too highly appreciated.

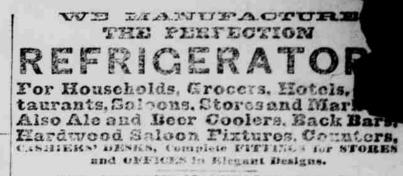

The Woodcock's Telegraphy.

I have closely observed the woodcock's system of telegraphy. The bird's mandibles are furnished with extremely sensitive nerves, so arranged that when the point of the bill rests upon the ground the slightest sounds are con. veyed to its brain. Standing upon the watersaturated earth of a spouty bog, our bird two rods' distance, then immediately lets fall his head till the tip of his bill touches the ground, and listens attentively. If his mate hears him, she replies, puts her bill on the ground and listens in turn. So the love mesage goes back and forth as long as the birds
