CONCLUDED.

was overwhelmed by the greater emotion which possessed her whole being. Farnsworth had never been more keenly alive in every fibre of his being than at this moment.

He rose to his feet, firm and determined. "Go away now!" he said to the boy quietly, but in a voice which even the archaic felt admitted of no disobedience.

"Yes, Farnsworth," the mother said pleadingly. "Go to bed now. I will come to you before long. That's a good boy."

"It is of no use to talk of that," she returned wearily. "You and I are done with each other. Even I can see that."

"I did not care. Cursing could not change things. Only I would not let him do it before the boy; I didn't want him to know what sort of a father he had."

"Delia," he said at length, "come and sit down. We must decide what it is best to do."

"I must have time to think. I will come back in the morning. Think yourself, Delia—not of me, or even of yourself, so much as of the boy. It is of him that we must have the first care."

FATE IN THE FINGERS.

Variations of the Fingers and the Significance of Each Type. People who reject as fanciful the distinctions of Spurzheim and Lavater still believe that a man with a big brow is likely to be clever, and a man with a strong chin to be determined.

To begin with the fingers, the variations of these are not numerous, and any hand may be referred to one of some three or four types. These are the pointed fingers, where the finger tips are straight and conical and the fingers themselves sleek and soft.

The fingers may be even more than square. They may be spatulate, rounded and rounded at the end like a chemist's blender or an artist's palette knife.
