HALSTEAD ON BLAINE.

Eight years ago I advocated the nomination for the presidency of General Bristow and opposed Mr. Blaine incidentally.

Now I am not devoting myself to toil in favor of any particular nomination, though my expressed preference is John Sherman; and I am not assailing Mr. Blaine, President Arthur, Senator Edmunds, or Gen. Logan holding them in high esteem.

Perhaps I have changed my policy, I profess to have profited by eight years' experience.

During those years I have been more deeply than ever convinced that there is no reasonable hope of doing any good with the Democratic party; and I have lost faith in the efficacy of independent movements.

I have had a share in the labor of holding parlor consultations with a few excellent citizens with a view of shattering both the great political organizations of the country, and I want to spend my time to better purpose. In this I see no occasion for public regret or private sorrow.

I propose to support the Republican National nominations, and it occurs to me to reserve my strength until after the proceeding of the convention. The journal with which I am connected is not at war with any of the candidates; and I believe in the cause above them all.

I am grateful to Mr. Blaine for his large share in defeating the third-term aggression against American republicanism, and I feel persuaded that in the atmosphere of suspicion of 1876, some of us accepted too readily the theory that the smoke of accusation against Blaine meant that there must be a hidden fire, soon to break out and consume him.

Whenever I attempted to hunt up the facts that were assumed to be the fuel, they failed to materialize. I should not, if he were the candidate, feel alarmed about his record. We know all that can be used against him, that it would be as ineffectual before the people at large as in the republican party, and that there is no candidate unassailable.

Mr. Blaine's enemies, who are violent and quailing themselves to show that hard things can be said of him, are not important and have mistaken their mission.

I know of some matters in which Mr. Blaine's assailants are utterly in error. President Garfield told that at the first of his cabinet meetings he opened business by saying to all, as he could do at that moment without offense to any they would get along peaceably only by carefully limiting themselves to their own departments of duty. He said Blaine acquiesced and complied with the suggestion fully and cordially up to that day—it was the last day of June, 1881.

And President Garfield said Blaine was not responsible for the New York appointments upon which Conkling resigned; that they were his own, and made under a sense of duty to his friends and himself as the President of the United States, upon the belief that when the shock was over there would be a better understanding.

When I compare my knowledge with the charges current against Mr. Blaine about these transactions and so often repeated that refutation becomes tedious, I am free to believe that he has been falsely accused in other matters; and I know enough of those who are making a business of hostility to him, to be sure that if the lines were drawn on them that they apply they could be made unhappy.

I think our strongest candidate and safest President would be John Sherman [?], and I gladly give President Arthur credit for his admirable administration, but I do not believe that the millions of republicans who kindle with enthusiasm at the name of Blaine have gone far wrong.

THE PARIS ELECTIONS.

The municipal elections now progressing in Paris are likely to prove a notable event in the history of the Republic. Not only has the vote been large, but the Revolutionists have already gained 60,000 votes over the election of 1881, and the ranks of the Revolutionists include Anarchists, Socialists, Anarchists, Collectivists, and all classes hostile to the Republic. Their victory has this time been a sweeping one, and the result has been that the Republican party has substantially disappeared. On the one side Monarchists have drawn from it and on the other side the Revolutionists, the latter to such an extent that the drift of Paris is now toward communism. Papers of all sorts of political opinion seem to be agreed upon the one certainty that the Commune will be established again, while the cooler and sharper sighted organs unite in declaring that the only alternative left is King or Commune, and that on the certain ruins of the Commune the monarchy will again climb to power.

Whatever else may occur as the outcome of the social and political complication, it is certain that the reign of the Commune will be brief and disastrous. Should it succeed in establishing itself behind its barricades for a little time, its overthrow will be speedy. The farmers of France will march against it as they did before and exterminate it in blood. It has no governing element in its construction. It has no wish for a government. It has no policy but anarchy. Its purpose is to overthrow the Government, the church, and the rights of property. Hence it aims at the rights of the farmers, and they will assist it with a force which cannot be resisted, and suppress it without mercy.

The question then is, Will the Republic be able to reassert its authority on the ruins of the Commune? This does not look probable if the Republic is not strong enough to put down the Commune's uprising; and if it is not to be forgotten that it is Republicans themselves who have aided the Commune to achieve its victory at the polls. If the life of the Republic is to be saved, it is the Commune is unable to resist the onslaught of the bourgeoisie, what follows but that the Monarchists, who have very able leaders in the field, will improve their opportunity and seize the reins of power again? Is it not the logical outcome of the situation?—Chicago Tribune.

CLIMBING THE SPIRAL STAIRS.

Invisible Architecture in a New England Parsonage.

"Yes," she said, "our children are married and gone, and my husband and I sit by our winter fire much as we did before the little ones came to widen the circle. Life is something like a spiral staircase: we are all the time coming around over the spot we started from, only one degree further up the stairs."

"That is a pretty illustration," remarked her friend, musingly, gazing into the glowing coals which radiated a pleasant heat from the many-windowed stove. "You know we cannot stop toiling up the hill, though."

"Surely we cannot, and for myself I don't find fault with that necessity provided the advance in life is not attended with calamity or suffering, for I have had my share of that. Not long since my health utterly broke down. My system was full of malaria. My digestion became thoroughly disordered and my nerves were in a wretched state. I was languid, ate little and that without enjoying it, and had no strength or ambition to perform even my light household duties. Medical treatment failed to reach the seat of the trouble. The disease, which seemed to be weakness of the vital organs, progressed till I had several attacks which my physicians pronounced to be acute congestion of the stomach. The last of these was a desperate struggle and I was given up to die. As the crisis had partially passed, my husband heard of the merits of Parker's Tonic as an invigorant in just such cases as mine. I took it and felt its good effect at once. It appeared to pervade my body as though the blessing of a new life had come to me. Taking no other medicine I continued to improve, and am now in better health than I have been for a long time."
