Keithley-Vass

The second county seat move is being made upon Plattsmouth by our Weeping Water friends, today, and to our way of thinking, it is the cleverest and wisest plan yet devised by our aggressive neighbors.

The HERALD, however, gracefully and generously acquiesces in the time-honored doctrine that "to the victor belongs the spoils," and as brother Keithley has fairly won one of our fair daughters away from us, we wish him God speed.

As the editor of a so-called Arthur republican paper was busily engaged, in a penitential mood, with a pair of dull shears, clipping a stalwart Blaine editorial from the columns of the Omaha Republican, Injured Innocence staid into his sanctum, and sternly cried: "Hold, traitor! low down in your boots you were an Arthur man."

"Who are you, oh wrathful spirit?" exclaimed the quaking editor, as the cold perspiration trickled down his spinal cord, and made its appearance at those providential rents which daddy Time had so opportunely made in his 90 cent suit of drab overalls for ventilative purposes.

"I am the rugged, stalwart rooster in charge of Jim Blaine's Boom in the west, and I have called to serve divine notice upon you, that you can no longer be permitted to differ with our syndicate. Hark ye, perfidious traitor! from this time henceforth and forever, you are ostracized from cultured, refined, stalwart society; in a word, the Omaha Republican has sawed you off of its list and may Jim Blaine's manager, have mercy on your disinherited organ!"

The dull shears dropped upon the floor with a dull thud, in a swoon, and the perspiration was taken up into the atmosphere to be gently bestowed upon a hungry corn crop, as the writhing phantom of Injured Innocence scurried the dust and cobweb of the Arthur Republican sanctum off of the large end of its bell crowned Blainite, and disappeared in those political mists that surround the turbid Missouri.

The Storm at Omaha and at Council Bluffs

The city was treated yesterday to a miniature tornado. During the dinner hour the clouds rolled up thick from the west and almost without warning the storm turned itself loose.

It was indeed a comical sight to see ladies wrestling with their parasols while the wind tossed them hither and thither. Their dress skirts made fine game for the unblushing wind and fled like a balloon they hurried their wearers along at an exceedingly swift pace.

To add to the discomfort of many of the ladies, the forenoon having been sweltering hot, they had come down dressed in snowy whiteness. Neatly everybody who knows anything at all about human nature knows that a lady never feels comfortable in a rain storm when she is robed in a white gown.

The ladies were not the only ones who were out of humor. It was no funny thing for a man to breast the storm, armed with a big umbrella which the wind blew around at will, while inside the stores, peeping through the windows, were crowds of human beings laughing at the unfortunate carrier of the measly thing.

While the rain was decidedly unpleasant to all who happened to be away from home, it was a good thing in many respects. It cooled the atmosphere and it was possible in the afternoon to draw a long breath. It washed the dust and mud from the pavements, that was not blown away by the wind.

The strong wind did some damage about the city. A number of trees were blown down as were also a number of fences. The fence and the gate of the Tivoli beer gardens, were laid low.

St. Philomena cathedral spire weaved from one side to the other, and for a time looked as if it was going to succumb to the elements and fall prostrate in the street, but it stood the storm all right.

The Missouri river felt the influence of the rain and during the rain rose considerable. It was one of the hardest storms that has visited this section this season, and it is hoped that they will come in a little milder form.

There was a change of 25 degrees in one hour during the storm, the mercury dropping from 91 in the shade to 66.

The storm at Council Bluffs was more severe than it was at Omaha, the wind blowing stronger than it did here. A large crowd had gathered at the circus grounds just previous to the storm to attend the Barret circus. Quite a number of people had already entered the tent, and when the wind came up they began slowly going out.
