Another Mazepa.

Cor. Chicago Tribune. M. Bousard, a wealthy cattle owner whose herds range in the unorganized territory of Northwestern Nebraska, has just returned from the annual "round up" in that region, and relates a tale of the plains that is, in some respects, a counterpart of the orthodox Mazepa. When Bousard reached his ranch about the middle of June, he found his cowboys nursing a young man whom they had rescued from the back of a broncho. When discovered, the modern Mazepa was lashed to the horse, entirely nude and unconscious. The animal was about broken down, as if from long running, and was easily lassoed by the cowboys, who cut the thongs, and released the strange captive. This happened about two weeks before Bousard's arrival, and during all that time the stranger

HAD LAIN IN A STUPOR. A few days before Bousard left on his return to Omaha, having a little medical knowledge, he succeeded in restoring the patient to consciousness, and his recovery was rapid. When able to talk, he said his name was Henry Burbank, that he was an Englishman and 34 yrs. of age. About three years ago at Falmouth, England, he formed a partnership with a friend named Tom Wilson, and with him came to America to embark in the cattle business. They cast about for awhile and finally settled in Northwestern Nebraska, where the range was unlimited and herders few and far apart. They built a comfortable ranch by a little stream where Wilson's young wife reigned as housekeeper, attended by two or three female domestics. Burbank is a

HANDSOME YOUNG GALLANT, who found it agreeable, while Wilson was absent riding about the range, to make love to the latter's wife. In the latter part of May, one of the cowboys, who had a grievance against Burbank, surprised him and Mrs. Wilson in a compromising situation and reported it to the woman's husband, whose jealousy had already been aroused. That night Burbank was captured while asleep in bed by Wilson and three of his men and bound before he had a chance to make any resistance. Wilson had him stripped of his clothing and bound on the BACK OF A WILD BRONCHO which was started off by a vigor us lashing. Before morning Burbank was unconscious. He thinks that the outrage was committed on the night of May 27th, and he was rescued on June 3, which makes seven days he had been traveling about the plains on the horse's back without food or drink, exposed to sun and wind.

Burbank proposes to pay a visit of retaliation on Wilson, and in this he will be backed by Bousard's men and those of the Ogallala Land and Cattle Company, whose range is near Bousard's.

Medill on Nebraska.

Cor. to Chicago Tribune. Crossing the Missouri at Plattsmouth a few miles below Omaha, at 9:30 a. m. the train ran along the south side of the Platte river for thirty or forty miles and then trended southerly to Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska where Judge Cobb, chief justice of the supreme court of the state left us. He was formerly a member of congress from Wisconsin and some years ago took up his residence in Nebraska; he was shortly after made a judge, and subsequently promoted to the head of the state bench. For the first 200 miles through Nebraska, the train swept over a splendid farming country—a deep, rich soil, and an undulating, self-draining surface. Lincoln, the state capital, is in the midst of a wonderfully fertile tract of territory. The twenty-five southeastern counties of Nebraska, of which Lincoln is the centre, contain an area of perhaps 10,000 square miles, comprise the garden of the state for general agricultural purposes. Not but that there is other good land, but no other block of the same area can be carved out of the state that is equal in fertility to it. It embraces on the map that part of Nebraska west of Missouri and between the Platte on the north to near Ft. Kearney and the Kansas line on the south, about to Red Cloud on the Missouri river, some 200 miles west of the Missouri, where the drought district begins to make its appearance. The crops all through this district as far as I could see or learn were fully as good as those I had seen the day before in Illinois, and rather more forward. This was particularly true of the country fifty miles east of Lincoln and sixty or seventy miles west of it. In all that distance not an inferior field of grain could be seen. The corn was simply grand.

A few days ago Frank Carroll killed a large black snake in his house. A little child who was just beginning to learn its mother tongue happened to notice the snake first kept chattering (ma see the big worm), some time before its mother noticed what the little fellow was saying, and looking around saw the snake's head protruding through a hole in the ceiling wall directly over the bed, observing the household duties with as much authority as a judge. When the snake was killed it was found to measure three and a half feet in length and was nearly as large as a man's wrist.

A large portion of the small grain will be cut this week, which is ripening very fast. In places the grain has been blown down and will have to be taken up one way only. The berry is plump and well filled, and will yield well. The chicken tug is injuring it to some extent in the last week.
