Respectfully submitted by Jos. Schlater the old jeweler of Opera House.

The Cleveland and Hendricks Club partially organized Saturday evening. Some 59 names were secured and Bro. Sherman told an elegant little story which did not exactly suit our fellow citizens of the Irish persuasion. Col. Ruffner fittingly and appropriately presided, and Col. Connor failed to materialize. Hon. Dan Draper was present and exhorted the boys to chip in. The mercury was way down in the bulb, sitting on all the enthusiasm there was, and stolidly refused to release its victim. Before our Irish fellow citizens go any further, THE HERALD would advise them to examine the Cobden cartoon which appears in the present number of Harper's Weekly. It might aid them to understand the British party's appreciation of the patriotic Irishmen.

A Handsome Gift.

Go to Schlater's the old jeweler, opposite the opera house, and buy goods for cash to the amount of ten dollars, and you will receive a ticket good for one chance of obtaining a lady's 14 karat, solid gold, hunting case, stem-winding watch, American make; tickets limited to 60; whenever all the tickets have been disposed of, notice will be given in the daily and weekly Plattsmouth papers, for the ticket holders to meet on a given day and place to select the party to whom the gift shall be made. 126ts-1914

The Moral Principle and the Republican Idea.

A moral principle and Republican Idea whiled away a few moments at the Brooklyn end of the great bridge waiting for the train.

"Where are you holding forth during this heated term?" said the Principle, adjusting its white hand tie.

"I am holding forth at the rooms of the Republican National committee," said the Idea, as it folded up Mr. Blaine's letter of acceptance and deposited it in its hand grip.

"By the way, where have you been these many days?" rejoined the Idea. "It seems to me, I have not met you since we took soda water together at the headquarters of the New York Independents down at Chicago last June."

"No-a?" said the Principle. "But where have you been," said the Idea, as the two old friends promenaded arm in arm on the platform.

"Well, you see I have been very busy since the Chicago convention George William has kept me on the road all the while. I do declare to goodness, I have not had a single good night's rest since we left Chicago. One day I am over here in Brooklyn feeling Henry Ward's pulse; then I am off on the fly to carry some news to Grover Cleveland, or away with a message to the Cambridge or Hartford Independents, or else I am down to Buffalo consulting with Grover's lawyers about social reform among the preachers of that benighted locality. Its hither and yonder among Independents, clergymen, and democrats, until I do declare, I don't know what my politics are."

"You have a hard time of it, for certain," said the idea as it scratched its right ear to sharpen its wits, "but tell me what in the deuce you are doing down at Buffalo, so much lately?"

"Well, now," said the Principle insinuatingly, as it pressed its companion's arm confidentially, "you and I have been pretty good friends in times past, and I don't care if I do tell you, only don't give me away over there at your headquarters. The facts are, Grover Cleveland sends for me constantly to consult, and see if I can't help him out of that awkward dilemma down in Buffalo. Those confounded clergymen down there are 'painfully sensitive' over that little affair of Grover's. Grover thought the public had condoned that little matter when he was elected governor, and now to have it sprung upon him is embarrassing, if nothing else, you know."

"Yes, I have heard of that," said the Idea, "but I can't understand why the democratic candidate would pick on a chap like you to justify that Buffalo scandal."

"Well, you see," said the Principle, "my views have undergone somewhat of a change in regard to such questions. We can't expect social perfection among our statesmen, and I advised the democratic committee to pay no attention to the matter. But the fact is, George William and Grover were very nervous over it, and they did not know what effect it would have on Henry Ward and the Christian Union and Independent, so they had me see those people, and I am just returning from Mr. Beecher's."

"I see," said the Idea. "Good scheme in sending you over there; but what does Mr. Beecher think of Grover's weak points, anyway?"

"Oh, that's all right, old fellow," said the Principle, "Henry Ward says he 'knows how it is himself,' besides, he says, Grover acted like the Christian reformer he is in giving the boy some other good man's name. Mr. Beecher says we must not look for perfection yet awhile; that evolution has not got its full work in yet. By-and-bye people will take a sensible view of such matters and become more charitable. O, I tell you Mr. Beecher is a good one! George William is going to have him deliver a powerful sermon against these uncharitable people down at Buffalo, that will put Grover in 'good shape'; but here comes our train, and I have an engagement with the Cobden Club this evening, so by-by." And the Moral Principle skipped airily on board the train, kissing its lavender kid to the Idea, which stood rooted to the platform pinching its right leg to ascertain really whether it was all a dream or not.

Cleveland's Conscience.

We are now told that Grover Cleveland was "conscientious" when, at the instigation of the city railroad corporations, he killed the bill making twelve hours a day's work for car drivers and conductors.

And we are told again that he was "conscientious" when he put millions of dollars in the pocket of Jay Gould by vetoing the Five-Cent Fare bill for elevated railroads.

And we are told again that he was "conscientious" when he killed the workingmen's lien law which was adopted at the last session of the legislature.

And we are yet again told that he was "conscientious" when he tried to thwart the object of the new railroad commissioners by putting it entirely under the control of two monopoly tools.

He has been a "conscientious" servant of the monopolists, as far as he could be, ever since he got the office of governor.

To quote the words of Thomas Carlyle about another man, Grover Cleveland has "a most extraordinary faculty of convincing himself that he conscientiously believes whatever tends to his personal advantage."—John Swinton's Paper.

Kicking Firemen.

There is much kicking over the prizes awarded in the late Fireman's Tournament at Omaha, and the Thurston's of that city do not seem inclined to surrender the prize cart won by the Fitzgeralds of Lincoln. Kicking is very much out of taste in such contests, and especially where one team turns out to be the champion kickers. Abide by the judges' decision, boys, and run faster next time.
