Republican District Convention.

The several counties are entitled to representation as follows, being based upon the vote cast for J. M. Hiatt, Regent of the University, giving one delegate at large, and one for every one hundred and fifty votes and the major fraction thereof:

JOHN STROBE, Secretary.
Lincoln, June 28, 1884.

The novel announcement is made that Hon. Geo. W. E. Dorsey has relegated the republicans of Dodge county to the rear of the procession and accept a delegation of bolters to present his claims for congress in that district. At least, we notice special dispatches to the Omaha press announce this to be the case. Gen'l Dorsey is evidently in for harmony and the persimmons at the same time. How the "reglers" up in Dodge county may feel about this, we are not informed.

The Evening Telegraph (Buffalo) which first published the Halpin-Cleveland scandal, now publishes Mrs. Halpin's statement which is wired the country. The widow's statement reiterates all the ugly features of that affair and makes Governor Cleveland out to be a very bad, cruel, heartless libertine. Mrs. Halpin's statement paints upon the sky the old truism, that "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned."

The Cass county republican convention will be held today in Louisville, and from all sources intelligence comes to the HERALD that the primaries throughout the county were well attended.

In one or two localities we have met good, life long republicans who are very much displeased over the manner in which certain gentlemen aspiring for office in the county, secured delegations in those localities, and in these cases, with few exceptions, we found those good republicans did not attend the primaries—"too busy" or "we knew it would be set up against us"—was the excuse offered by these gentlemen.

This is the "old, old story." It is the duty of every citizen to attend these first meetings of the people, from which springs our home rule. It is at these caucuses our representatives are made. The man who absents himself, has practically no voice in the selection of men to represent himself and his neighbors, and if he cannot support the selection made by the political party to which he belongs, finds himself relegated to the "Hopkin's choice" of swallowing his crow, or voting for some man named, by the political organization to which he is opposed, which is always a very unsatisfactory way of righting the wrong—correcting the mistake—made at the primary, which he should have attended. In addition to this, by absenting himself from the caucus he becomes powerless to correct a wrong perpetrated there, by appeal to the delegate convention, which ratifies or rejects the recommendations of the primary convention, while if he attends that first meeting there is always a way to save his political rights and have them passed upon by the nominating convention.

Every man should attend the primaries of some political party nearest in accord with his views of correct rule, and do his duty as a citizen, then if he finds bad men are determined to force unfit representatives upon the people, he has just and intelligent grounds to oppose such unfit men at the polls, and can always have the sympathy of honest men in the party to which he belongs.

SO WITH THE WORLD

I saw a young babe in its cradle. It smiled in its sleep, and the mother knelt and kissed its soft cheek and prayed God that her baby boy might live to a good old age. It opened its eyes and smiled, and the children whispered to each other: "See! The angels have been talking to him, and he is glad!"

I saw a young man, he looked longingly up the path leading to fame and glory.

There was a proud flash in the father's eyes as he saw the boy come and go and the mother looked after him with swelling heart and whispered a prayer to Heaven to keep her boy's footsteps from wicked paths.

I saw a young man as he stepped over the threshold, and met the grim world with a smile of self reliance.

The father was now wrinkled and gray, but there was a fonder flash in his eye as he listened to the applause of the multitude. The mother was aged and feeble, and tears came to her eyes as she murmured: "He is moving the hearts of thousands by his eloquence, but I pray thee, O Heaven, to keep him pure of heart and free from sin!" The children who had whispered before were no longer children. They had also grown to man's estate. Some joined in the applause—some felt malice and envy commanding them to silence.

I saw a strong man in his prime. He had fame and wealth, a loving wife, happy children, a beautiful home. Men bowed before him. Men flattered him. His voice echoed over the land and stirred the pulses in city and hamlet.

The father and mother were dead, and their last prayers had been for him. He stood alone, but he had the support of a nation and the homage of a world. So it seemed to him, but down in their hearts, men feared, envied and hated him.

I saw an old man as a winter's night settled gloomily down over the desolate laud.

He was old and weak and hungry and poor. He was thinly clad, and shivered in the raw air. He stood at the corner, his trembling hand held out in mute appeal to the passersby, but no one gave him alms. Some had their visions blinded by the falling flakes—others mocked at and cursed him. For a long hour he hungered and shivered and asked only for what would buy a crust of bread, and then he bowed his head still lower and dragged himself further away into the bitter darkness. And men called after him in heartless tones: "The county house is the place for beggars."

I saw a stiff, frozen corpse at the morgue.

It was of an old man. There was snow and frost in his gray locks—the thief fingers were clinched; the tears had frozen as they welled up to the poor old eyes. They had found him dead on the street—dead and frozen. A shadow stood beside the marble slab—it bent over the dead and kissed the cold cheek—it sobbed and grieved as only a mother grieves, and we seemed to hear the words:

"This was the babe in its cradle; the youth panting for renown the young man winning his first crown the strong man at whose feet the nation bowed like slaves; this was my son!"

And men handled the poor old body as if it were a fagot and they mockingly carried it to each other:

"A pine coffin; a grave in potter's field and to-morrow we forget that he ever lived!"—M. Quad.
