MR. VANDERBILT supports Grover Cleveland. The great monopolist evidently knows which side the butter is spread on. "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind."

The democrats are now piping up to whistle for courage's sake. Ohio and Wisconsin will go democratic says the Omaha Herald; and they will, just about as much as Nebraska will. Such whistling shows the distress of the whistlers very plainly.

The Omaha Herald says that Gov. Hendricks is a man who embodies in his own personality and public life the character of a true American. This is about the standard upon which the Omaha Herald measures the best American character: By a man, who in war was a copper-head, and who lent moral support to the enemies of his country; that man was Tom Hendricks.

MR. CLEVELAND'S letter of acceptance has arrived in the rear of Ben. Butler's. The letter is meritorious in brevity, and in the additional fact that a statesman, presumably Samuel J. Tilden, did the greater part of the work so far as the contents of the paper are concerned, people will look upon it with a degree of indifference, for democratic professions are easy to make, and are made to order, to suit all dissenters to the work and policy of the republican party.

BEN. BUTLER is out with a letter of acceptance so long that even the Chicago papers hesitate about publishing it. The letter, while largely of the stump speech order, is pointed enough in its reference to the democratic party of today, and their misstatements and inconsistencies, to make interesting reading for them. Mr. Butler's letter is based upon the following four general propositions:

1. Hostility to all monopolies in commerce, industries and lands.
2. The preservation of the national legal tender currency of the people, constitutionally issued by Congress.
3. The needs of all men and women who labor in the production of wealth to be protected against the encroachments of those who absorb and consume without producing.
4. The necessity for reform and correction of abuses in government, so that its pressure on the people would be made as light as possible; its administration effective to guard the rights of American citizens at home and abroad; to make public servants, individual or corporate, subservient to the use and will of the people only, so as to restore the prosperity of the country, with equal rights, equal burdens, equal powers and equal privileges of all people.

MR. CLEVELAND in his letter of acceptance says not a word concerning the greatest question that divides the two great parties of today. The protection of our industries. This may be easily explained however, for the democratic party itself so befuddled and neutralized this question in their national platform that no man can stand upon that platform with any knowledge of what it does mean on the tariff question, and the man is yet to be born who can translate that tariff plank into an honest, outspoken opinion upon that really vital question to the American people. Mr. Cleveland therefore left that question entirely alone, and if he does not make the mistake Mr. Hancock made later in his campaign in trying to explain the tariff, he will save himself humiliation. Mr. Cleveland, in his letter, discourses in glittering phrases upon the labor question, and he does this in the face of the fact that to every bill passed in the New York legislature since he has been Governor, and that were passed for the amelioration of labor, he has attached to them his veto.

His professions of care and the fostering of labor, sent out in the face of the fact that he has been the constant tool of the monopolists, is very refreshing reading. His practice since Governor of the state gives the lie direct to his professions, and the laboring classes through the country are intelligent enough and wide awake enough to recognize this fact.

NEBRASKA AS IT WAS AND IS.

It is believed that over all this vast region once rested an immense lake, compared to which Lake Superior is a mere pond. Over the bottom of this lake were spread through the ages lacustrine deposits of soil from five to two hundred feet deep. A small area on the north side of the state seems to have emerged first, for the soil is entirely gone from it. But it must have been at one time a tropic island of marvelous luxuriance of vegetable and animal life.

In the hardened clay of its low hills are to be found vast numbers of fossil animals that have no existence outside the tropics. Here were immense numbers of rhinoceri, horned and hornless, and others with none. Here ranged the hippopotami and vast herds of carnivorous animals; here are found petrified turtles, one specimen, perfectly preserved, being seven feet across. There are several species of fossil monkeys.

"It requires but little imagination," says Bishop Warren, "to cover the region of the mouth of the Niobrara with abundant forests, through which meandered great rivers, full of the hugest animals, while above them chattered the monkey, and flew the gorgeous bird of paradise."

Afterward the surrounding country, covered with the richest soil, rose above the waters; the climate grew more severe, and the tropical animals and birds gave place to those of a colder clime.

One race of men lived here and disappeared; another took their place, but they have passed away, leaving but little trace; a third, now known as Indians, luxuriated in the meat of the buffalo, but they are nearly as extinct as the two races that have sunk beneath those waves of land, "unwept, unremembered and unused."

It seems to be a hard matter for men to conquer this continent. Whether the south race has gathered strength enough from allying all kindreds and bloods under the whole heavens for its conquest, is yet to be seen in the coming centuries.

The part now called Nebraska, is two hundred by four hundred miles in extent, and contains forty eight million acres. On the east flows the Missouri river; irregularly through its whole length, flows the Platte river, receding all its tributaries from the north side.

The state has a slightly undulating surface, and has so rich a soil, that after-crops have been removed for thirty years from some places. It shows no sign of needing fertilization, nor will it show such need till the one hundred and fifty feet of soil has been turned into wheat or other crops. The soil most nearly resembles that of the Nile valley, in Egypt. It is perfectly prodigal in the production of fruit. The state has twice been awarded the highest premium of the United States Pomological society, and thereby been debarr'd from competing again. One apple has been grown that weighed twenty nine and one half ounces, and one man raised in a year 14,000 bushels of peaches.

The state was admitted into the union in 1867. All the early inhabitants came into Nebraska in the so-called prairie schooners—a covered wagon containing all the family and their earthly effects. Finding land to suit, they first erected a house of sods, with places cut for a door and window, which made them a comfortable abode. Many happy homes were hung with tapestry of figured muslin, and whitewashed on the outside for a very trifling cost.—Philadelphia Saturday Night.

"It has become so common to begin an article in an elegant, interesting style.

"Then run into some advertisement that we avoid all such.

"And simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible,

"To give them one trial, which so proves their value that they will never use any thing else."

"The remedy so favorably noticed in all the papers,

Religious and secular is

"Having a large sale and is supplanting all other medicines.

"There is no denying the virtues of Hop plant and the proprietors of Hop Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability

"In compounding a medicine whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation."

Did She Die.

"No!

"She lingered and suffered long, yining away all the time for years."

"The doctors doing her no good."

"And at last was cured by this Hop Bitters the papers say so much about."

"Indeed! Indeed!

"How thankful we should be for that medicine."

A Daughter's Misery
