The Grand Army Paradeat St. Louis Made in a Drenching Rain-The Enthusiasm Unabated Cray Haired Veterans Pass Under Ceneral Grant's Picture With Uncovered Heads-Struggling Through Slush

Sr. Louis, Sept. 28 .- Rain continued to drop down steadily in the morning but Grand Marshal Grier issued an order to prepare for the parade. The order to fall in for the parade was received at the various camps and headquarters shortly after nine and the men turned out with rubber coats, umbrellas and trousers rolled up. Shortly before cleven o'cleck the column was formed and the procession started, headed by the escort of police. Then followed Grand Marshal Grier with his chief of staff and aides. Logan post of St. Louis, mounted, and the Springfield (Mass.) battalion, were the special escorts to the commander-in-chief. His staff preceded the twenty carriages containing the war governors and other honored guests. In the lead was one occupied by Mayor Francis and General Sherman. Then followed divisions of the Grand Army, ten in number. The de partment of Missouri, commanded by Colonel Nelson Cole, was given the right of line. #### LINCOLN'S CELEBRATED PHRASE

"He Made no Pretense of Originality in the Matter," Says Ward H. Lamon. For using, in his Gettysburg speech, the celebrated phrase "the government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth," Mr. Lincoln has been subjected to brutal criticism as well as the most groundless flattery. Some have been base enough to insinuate against that great and sincere man the crime of willful plagiarism; others have ascribed to him the honor of originating the phrase entire. There is injustice to him in either view of the case. I personally know that Mr. Lincoln made no pretense of originality in the matter, nor was he conscious of having appropriated the thought or the words of any other man. If he be subject to the charge of plagiarism, so is the great Webster, who used substantially the same phrase in his celebrated reply to Hayne. Each may have acquired the peculiar form of expression (the thought itself being as old as the republican idea of government) by the process known as unconscions appropriation. Certain it is that neither Webster nor Lincoln originated the phrase. Let us see how the case stands:

In the preface to the old Wickliffe Bible, published A. D. 1324, is the following declaration: "This Bible is for the government of the people, by the people and for the people," which language is identical with that employed by Mr. Lincoln in his Gettysburg speech. In an address before the New England anti-slavery convention in Boston, May 29, 1850, Theodore Parker defined democracy as "a government of all the people, by all the people, for all the people of course." Substantially the same phrase was used by Judge Joel Parker in the Massachusetts constitutional convention in 1853. A distinguished diplomat has acquainted me with the singular fact that almost the identical phrase employed by Mr. Lincoln was used in another language, by a person "whose existence even was not probably known to Mr. Webster, the Parkers or Mr. Lincoln, and who certainly did not borrow it from them." On page 31 of a work entitied "Geschichte der Schweizerischen Regeneration von 1830 bis 1848, von P. Fedder "n," appears an account of a public meeting he.1 at Olten, Switzerland, in May, 1830. On that occasion a speaker named Schinz used the following language: "All the goveraments of Switzerland (referring to the cantons) must acknowledge that they are simply from the people, by the people, and for the people."-Ward H. Lamon's Letter.

Typhoid Fever on the Steamers.

People who are about to visit Europe should be very careful what ship they take for the passage. I have heard within the last two or three weeks of some of the most terrible cases of typhoid fever contracted on board ships of the lines considered by the public first class. I met the other night a

ARMS AND UNIFORMS.

The Needs of Our Millitia-The "State Service" Dress a Mistake.

To argue about the advantage of a uniformity of arms between the states and the general government would seem to be scarcely necessary, so palpable ought it to be. For one state to have Sharp's rifles, another Remington, while the general government uses Springfield, is to prevent an interchange of ammunition and accouterments at a time, perhaps, when such interchange might be invaluable. The inconvenience of a difference of armament in the same state is open to the same objection, only with still greater force. With regard to a uniformity of dress, however, so strict as to preclude all individuality, the gain seems less pronounced.

The tendency at present is to abolish regimental uniforms in favor of a state uniform closely approximating to that of the general government. So far as a fatigue or active service dress is concerned, this general uniformity of attire is undoubtedly advisable, but I think a distinctive uniform, and even a showy one for dress occasions, has much to recommend it. A distinctive uniform gives esprit du corps, undoubtedly tempts and attracts a larger enlistment, engenders greater care in its preservation, and keeps alive the martial fervor. I remember talking to a French officer on this subject, and he told me that there were once but two sizes of uniforms for the French infantry, and the necessity of every man to adjust himself to one of these extremes caused greater dissatisfaction than even could have been produced by short rations

Lord Wolseley is equally decided on the value of dress uniforms. "The soldier is a peculiar animal," he says, "who can alone be brought to the highest efficiency by inducing him to believe that he belongs to a regiment infinitely superior to others about him. In their desire to foster this spirit, colonels are greatly aided by being able to point to some peculiarity in dress." Again he says: "The better you dress a soldier the more highly will be be thought of by women and consequently by himself."

Smartness, beauty, picturesqueness has its utility, much as this utilitarian age affects to Edwin Forrest's Turning Point.

"In the following spring I went to New York and put up at a boarding house. I was without a dollar. I did not have two shirts in the world. My clothes had been seized for board in Albany. I was thoroughly disgusted with the world and resolved to kill myself. I went to a drug store and bought some arsenic. I told the apothecary I wanted to kill rats. I went to my room and mixed it, and was on the point of taking it, when, just as such things happen on the stage, I heard a gentle rap on the door. A man came in and said he was an actor, and that his name was Woodhull. The object of his visit was to get me to play for his benefit. He said he had never seen me act, but he had heard Ogden Hoffman, a member of the legislature, and others capable of judging, say that I was very fine. I told him hastily that I had done with acting, and that I did not know anything about him or his benefit. The actor looked downcast and said: 'I am a poor man, and have a long summer to run through. I had gather near the bank on which he stands, hoped you would come to my aid and assist me in supporting my family; otherwise I am beggared.' These words touched me so," said poking their vicious jaws out of the water as if in expectation of a feast. #### For many years I have been devoured by an intense and abiding curiosity to know what a tramp carries in his bundle. You may have noticed that no matter where you meet a tramp or under what circumstances. he has a bundle with him. It may be done compactly up in a newspaper or tightly wrapped in old and dirty rags; it may be two feet square or no bigger than your fist, but it is always a bundle of some sort, and one to which he clings with the tenacity of death itself. I have heard a number of conjectures hazarded as to its possible contents. Some critics have maintained that it holds food and others that it is a mere dummy, contrived to impose upon a credulous landlord at a half dime lodging house. I have read newspaper stories of fortunes concealed in the tramp's bundle, and been told of occasions when the bundle found in the possession of a dead tramp contained family papers and documents to prove that the late unlamented was a person of high birth and exalted connections. But of my own knowledge I have never been able to satisfy myself as to its actual character, so that when I was accested the other day by a tramp with the usual bundle and a plea for the price of a night's lodgings, I said to him:

"Tell me what is in your bundle and I'll give you a dollar."

"Honest?" said the tramp. I assured him of it.

"You won't give me away to a living soul?" "I pledge you my word."

"Well, then," said my tramp, in a voice full of alcohol and mystery, "I don't mind telling you. It's my full dress suit. You see a feller in my position has to move in society a good deal, and he must have his dress suit ready, for he don't know when he may need it."-Alfred Trumble in New York News.

A Lively Imagination.

Some years ago a newspaper man with a lively imagination went upon a trip. I think he paid his way, wildly improbable as that may seem to be, because either the newspaper business must have fallen off in its emoluments lately, or he must be lying like all who go there. There were not so many people about the place then, and it was not so easy a trip. In the party was a bright young married lady, who had also a great deal of fun in her. The two put up a job that what either of them saw in the shapes of the crags and peaks in the clouds, or anything else, the other was to indorse it and say "How lovely!" or "Isn't it weird?" or something like that. The charm worked.

"Do you see that rock? Isn't it the exact picture of an immense chariot? And just look if that doesn't look like a horse of gigantic proportions drawing it?" "It is. How grand it is."

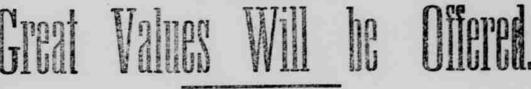

"Where is it?" from all the passengers.

"There; why, don't you see it? You see it, Mrs. Smith, don't you?" "Very plainly. It's exactly like it."

Then one by one the others would begin to recognize it, or swear they did. The number of those singular resemblances kept growing until the two began really to see things that could not by any possibility be distorted out of the landscape, and finally the joke got thin. -San Francisco Chronicle.
