—After you have learned that a man has earned success by faithful, honest and brainy work, don't discourage him in his endeavors by telling him that he is an infernal lucky fellow. It is perseverance that wins. The will to do, the will to be is the controlling element in the make up of master minds. An unflinching trust in success is only justified by unceasing industry and worthy motives. Luck is a fickle attendant, quite incapable of bestowing justly. Thus are her wiles misleading. It is better to attain success by worthy efforts, than to be made successful by luck, since endeavor rewards nine times where luck, even when ardently courted, rewards once. Labor wins; luck misguides. Labor or endeavor demands reward; luck is as likely to bestow her favors promiscuously, some times judiciously, more times unworthy.—Tecumseh Journal.

Punctuality in the Schools.

One of the great necessities of success in business is to be punctual, and like all other things it has to be taught.

Our public schools have become, of recent years, such a handy road to education in almost everything, that some parents leave to them the entire trust of instructing their children in all branches of study and all qualifications to fit them for business. To accomplish this, it is necessary to have punctuality among the scholars so their studies can be given with a uniformity.

In most all scholars a habit of being punctual has to be grown by careful persuasion and reasoning, and sometimes reward and punishment are brought into play with good effect, and school laws, or rules, are made, relative to punctuality, with penalties attached; and by all imaginable means the necessity of being on time, is impressed upon the mind of the young student, and if possible, a pride in being punctual is imparted.

The scholar learns to be punctual because of more benefit from his lessons, a good opinion from his teachers and to avoid the disgrace which rests on the tardy and absent, but at the same time, that student is perfecting, and studying and acquiring a habit which will be one of the greatest attributes to his future success.

Punctuality in schools is every day becoming a study of more importance, and the teachers report their various devices for obtaining it to each other, and its connection with the schools makes them doubly worthy of attendance.

Neither the teacher nor the scholar can receive too much encouragement in their efforts to maintain this factor in the schools, and to improve upon it, and the habit should be encouraged in every child by every parent.

The schools of Plattsmouth are well regulated as to punctuality, and the HERALD takes pleasure in any means by which it could encourage the regular attendance of the public schools.

The following are the names of those who have been perfect in attendance and punctuality during the past month in room 8: John Bauer, August Mumm Clarence Miller, Eddie Murphy, Sperry Ruffner, Anna Houk, Bertha Kennedy, Louie Martin, Maud Maoyz, Frank Curtis, Rob. Staniforth, Otto Wurl, Frank Wise, Hattie McMackin, Lulu Smith, Mary Wise, Mamie McCoy, Burnard Wurl, Lillie Gensel, Josie Grace, Frank Whisler, Emma Poissal.

Elmwood Echo.

A rather strange freak of nature occurred here, in the shape of wind, Wednesday night at 11 o'clock. There was not a cloud to be seen except at a far-off distance in the horizon, when a heavy gale of wind came up from the northeast and set everything to whirling that was loose. Boards, tin pans, wash tubs, paper and dust filled the air, and things had the appearance of a young cyclone; but the strangeness of it was that no cloud accompanied it. It lasted but five minutes and all was quiet.
