plains the Science of Floating.

"I suppose," I remarked to Mr. Johnson, the well known swimmer, "that such a cork ent from Chicago, and, in short, that no as yourself cannot quite understand how a word had been received of any accident person sinks." "Oh, yes, but I can. It is only whatever. Quite similar was the course such as myself, who study the science of floating, that can understand the mystery of ince put used by the company's head- sinking. A swimmer becomes a swimmer by endeavoring to find out, not so much how to swim, as how not to sink. Man or woman A reporter for a local evening paper can float-there is no exception. ### WORKING GIRLS' FUN.

ENJOYING THEMSELVES AT NEW YORK CITY'S FREE BATHS.

How They Compare in Physique with Their More Fashtonable Sisters-Rad Feet Almost Universal-A Little Shop Girl's Antics-A Quarrel.

In the period of excessive heat, which has

It has lain in the line of my duty and pleasure to see several of them the past week and the sight has been one of considerable interest. For one thing I have learned that physically the working girl compares very avorably with her luckier sisters who kick up their aristocratic little heels in the surf that tumbles upon expensive and fashionable benches. This is not apparent at first, because when the working girl comes stepping out of the dressing room ready for the bath her smooth outlines are not defined by the trim snugness of Jarsey cloth and silk hose cut to artfully display while pretending to conceal feminine symmetry. No; she usually wears some dingy old flannel bag rented from the attendant and too big for her, or else a cast off garment of her own almost too lirunken and fattered for decency.

Some queer combinations one sees. One red haired girl, whose bare ankles were white as milk, had on as a lathing garment a frayed red flannel petticoat and an old silk insque. Another wore what had once been a blue nun's veiling wrapper, which was all the better for a bath. A third was still more unique and original in a calico Mother Hubbard for a tunic and her younger brother's trousers. The offect of this last was stunning, and the wearer of it puddled about in the cool salt water with the lofty expression of one who had surmounted the stern harriers f untoward cir unistance by the might of their own unnided intellect. Some of the girls, however, can afford cheap but pretty bathing suits, and these are usually the ones who swim and cannot afford to have their movements hampered with clinging garments. Many of them swim uncommonly well and are fond of showing it of? in the water. It's a pretty sight to see all the wet aces, rosy with the sharp kiss of salt water, urned upward, laughing and shouling to many of these girls, more than one would most of them have led, are extremely well

ALL HAVE EAD FEET.

When the water melts down the crude lines of their ill fitting garments it is discoverable that the upper classes do not monopolize feminine symmetry. But as a rule all these girls have bad fect, with the joints twisted out of place and the whole foot and its five toes the most misshapen and distorted thing you can well imagine. This is the result, I ancy, of the had shoes they wear, too short and with ill fitting lining and wretched heels. There is nothing a woman's status can be so clearly marked by as the style of shoe she has on and the straightness of her foot. In spite of their crippled and malformed pedals these women splash there with great pleasure and freedom and play endless practical jokes on each other. Their favorite amusement seemed to be to smack the water suddenly with the alm of the open hand, immediately in front of a woman who was talking and which filled her mouth and eyes full of water. A pretty little shop girl, with a dimple in her chin, who was a daring and beautiful swimmer, found her chief amusement in going up and sitting on the rail and then letting herself tumble over backward into the water. Every time she came down with a great splash the other women remonstrated, but to no pur-

Finally one of them sauntered up there and sat down, to rest, apparently. Just as the offender threw herself backward this woman caught her by the foot and held her thus doubled backward over the rail. It was the greatest wonder she didn't snap her spine like a pipe stem. She didn't, but she squalled like nothing so much as a cat hung over a line and tied to the tail of another cat. The attendant came to the rescue, the pair of them tumbled into the water out of her reach and a feminine naval battle ensued. They pinched and scratched, tripped each other up, pulled hair and lashed the whole bath into such a foam that a policeman was summoned, who ordered them both out of the bath and threatened to arrest them. No one can even fully realize the meaning of "madder than a wet hen" who has not seen two such belligerent females emerge from a watery encounter. The honors of the day appeared to rest with dimple chin, who vowed she would come back next day and tumble backward into the bath 450 times. Such troubles are rare, I believe .- New York Cor. Brooklyn Eagle.

Educating the Chinese,

The Chinese government, under the liberalizing influence of the new regime of the young emperor, has adopted a curious and significant scheme of geiting at the bottom facts about civilization outside the flowery empire. A dozen distinguished young scholars will be selected from competitive examination, in which the chief test will be ability to describe and apprehend the meaning of novel things, and they will be sent abroad for two years to study foreign countries. Each will get a salary of $250 a month and $50 for an interpreter, and all their traveling expenses. Each will follow a particular bent in working up things he knows the most about. Monthly reports on topography, ethnology, commerce, habits, morality, industries, armaments, political institutions, etc., will be forwarded to Pekin. At the end of two years the services of each will be utilized in the Chinese government in such departments as he studied to the most advantage, and those who have done best will get ennobled. When one considers some of the raw, untutored and indifferent officials that America sends abroad, there rises just a scintilla of doubt whether the Occident really monopolizes all the civilization of the world .- Chicago
