THE WORLD'S BEST ROADS.

Magnifleent Highways Found in British

India-A Marvelous Road. It might seem a good deal like presumption on my part to assert that I am in a po sition to pronounce upon the comparative merits of the world's roadways better than any man living; but no reader who has ever ridden a bicycle would doubt the assertion. Having made a trail around the land portion | From Pall Mall hundreds of spectators look of the earth's surface with a bicycle, I can now take an ordinary map of the world and trace out from beginning to end of that great rircle, where the road is good, where it is bad or indifferent, and where it is execrable.

The best roads in the world, many renders will be surprised to hear, are in British India. After riding the bicycle 1,400 miles through the Punjab, Oade and Bengal, I am fairly at a loss to find words to express sufficiently my admiration of the enterprise that has belted In the with such magnificent highways as I found there. The finest road in India is me wa as the Grand Trunk road; it extends for 1 600 miles, an unbroken highway of marvelous perfection, from Peshawur, on the Afghan frontier, to Calcutta. It is metaled for much of its length with a substance peenhar to the country known as kunkah, Kunkah is obtained almost anywhere throughout the Punjab--underlying the surface soil. It is a sort of loose nodular deposit or calcareous concrete which may be readily converted into time by burning in a kiln, When rolled and wetted it cements together and forms a road surface smooth and compact as an asphaltum pavement, and of ex-

TRAFALGAR SQUARE.

HORRIBLE CONDITION OF THE POOF PEOPLE OF LONDON.

can Lady's Experience-A Starving Family-The Camping Ground of an Army of Paupers.

The horrible condition of Trafalgar square at night grows worse. Despite the rain and cold shivering wroteles continue to cover the stones of the square every night, and the place has recently become the resort for carious gay young bucks. After dining out in the Strand, they pass by there to throw down a few coppers and to heighten, perhaps, the appreciation of their own blessings by r glimpse of the extreme of misery. Travelers also, especially Americans, who fill the huge hotels about the square, visit the place regu-larly as one of the sights of London. Many a story will soon be told in America of the frightful poverty of London, and the listeners will have the satisfaction of knowing that the facts cannot possibly be exaggerated, I talked with an American lady who went there at night with some friends and was frightened into hysteries within a few moments. She is a charitable young married woman, who, by the way, was recently a visitor at the White House. In a moment of sympathy she handed a coin to a poor man. In a second, she said, the entire paveher. She had not not read that the whole surout men and women, many of them almost half naked, of whom a half hundred had crushed and struggled round her in the hope of charity. Fortunately the policemen, who are regularly on duty there, came running up, and no serious result followed the impralence of displaying money in such company.

A STARVING FAMILY. George Matthews, the son of James Matthews, of The Butfalo Express, went with his bride to see if it was as bad as had been described. The first group be came upon on the outskirts of the camp was a woman lying asleep on the bare stones with a young baby in her mene, while a man walked up and down beside her mattering and cursing to himself. These were respectable looking people, Matthews says, though half clothed and probably starving. He gave the man some silver, and waking the woman and taking the child in his arms, the man said: "Thank you; you are extremely kind," told his wife to thank the lady, and started, actmully ranning, to a stand near, where hot caree, bread, butter, etc., could be bought pance. Matthews did not care i have his wife see mything more, and scopped his investigations, For several days post a large number of the poor people have continued throughout he day in the spare, after having spent the night there. Hundreds of them are to be seen there now all day long. What they ent and how they live is a mystery. Policemen are regularly detailed to patrol what has become the recognized camping ground of poverty. The inhabitants of the emap are made to keep close to the high stone wall bounding the Pall Mall side of the square. down all day long at the curious sightswomen stretched at full length sleeping it. their rags, and men quarreling over the tobacco or coppers occasionally thrown down, Last night there was unusual jollification and feasting in the camp. Men drove up with a wagon full of broad. The way in which it was seized and devoured showed plainly how great is the misery there. - London Cor. New

French Business Methods.

The French never, or very soldom, allow themselves to be completely absorbed in business. They always set upart a certain pertion of time to the amenities of life. They are as serious as you like at work, but in a moment they will exhibit any amount of good humor at play, and again will resume the harness as quickly as it was thrown off. If you go into a shop at dinner time-I speak now of the small provincial towns—you may run the risk of receiving very little attention, or even none at all. I remember once-it was at St. Halo, in the summer-I entered a hatter's shop at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. A well dressed, ladylike girl came out of the back parlor and inquired what I wanted.

"I want a straw hat, mademoiselle," I said. "O! that's very awkward just now." "Well, you see," she said, "my brother is at dinner," and after a pause of a few seconds she added: "Would you mind calling again in an hour's time." "Not at all," I replied; "I shall be delighted to do so." I was not only amused, but struck with admiration for the independence of that worthy hatter. After a few years' residence in England a little scene of that description was a great treat

An hour later I called again. The young zirl made her second appearance "My brother waited for you for quite ten minutes," she said to me; "he is gone to the cafe with a friend now.

"I am sorry for that," I said. "When can I see him? "If you will step across to the cafe, I am sure he will be happy to come back and at-

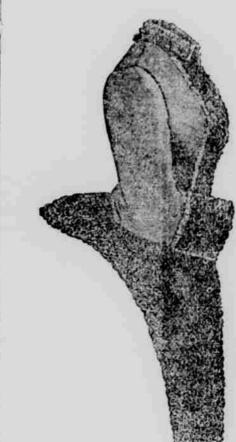

I thanked the young lady, went to the cafe, introduced myself to the hatter, who was enjoying a cup of coffee and having a game of lominoes with a friend. He asked me to allow him to finish the game, which of course I was only too glad to do, and we returned to the shop together .- Cor. Kansas City Times.

Opera at the Dressmaker's, I was passing the establishment of a fashable dressmaker on a stylish street just off of Fifth avenue, when there suddenly pealed out a most magnificent burst of vocal music that evidently proceeded from the dressmaker's parior. It was a woman's voice, manifestly of the highest cultivation, for the mercean it sang was one of these tours de force whose execution is reserved for great artists alone. A police officer who had stopped on his patrol to listen, too, furnished an explanation of the imprompts concerto.

"It's one of the opera singers," he said. "She's having a dress tried on, and she sings to see if it will give her room to breathe in-
