Plattsmouth now has five daily passenger trains to and from Omaha. No. 5 going west at 8:50 a. m., and No. 6, going east at 7:15 p. m., are the only trains which come and go by the way of Louisville.

The stopping stations for the fast trains, No. 1 and 2, from the junction to Denver are as follows: Pacific Junction, Plattsmouth, Omaha, Ashland, Lincoln, Fairmont, Hastings, Holdridge, Oxford, McCook, Akron, Denver.

A Bohemian from Plattsmouth was in town Wednesday evening in pursuit of two runaway children, a boy and a girl who had left their home in or near that city. The boy was about 10 years old and the girl about 14. As they were seen near town by several persons it is likely that they have been captured and taken back home ere this. A gentleman who saw them informed the Observer reporter that they were very thinly clad, the boy's toes protruding out through his boots and the girl wore a thin calico dress. They were quite young to start out to face this cold world.—Louisville Observer.

Omaha Herald: Mattie Vogle is the name of a young girl who applied at the police station last night for assistance. The officers saw that she was inexperienced and innocent, and did what they could for her—gave her a place to sleep. To be sure the bed was hard—a board—and she could not shut from her ears the rebel songs and coarse jests of the imprisoned wrong-doers. But anything was better than a night in the streets, and she accepted the hospitality with thanks. She says that she arrived in the evening from Louisville, Neb. On the train she met and talked with a strange young man who volunteered to assist her to obtain the work she sought. He said he could get employment for her immediately. He walked with her about the streets for several hours and finally left her at the door of the station, telling her to make application there. Then he left her hurriedly. Mattie told the officers enough to lead them to believe that the stranger to whom she had entrusted herself had tried to lead her to ruin. He had taken from her all the money she had except 30 cents. The girl says that her parents are well to do; that she left home with their consent and that she would get work if she could find the friends she seeks. The officers do not doubt her story and are astonished at the parental ignorance which permitted a fifteen year-old child to go alone to a strange city to seek employment at the hands of persons whose address they did not know. They are also impressed by the belief that a police station should have a place for virtue and inexperience as well as for vice and degradation. Furthermore they think that the case is one in which the Woman's society should take an interest.

It Has Leaked Out.

Plattsmouth has long enjoyed the blessings of a good name and she has always showed the bright side to every body. Her murders were kept quiet, the lynch-mobs and their deeds have been kept from the public ear, and wild boys have been caught and caged, all the thrilling events of a booming town have happened, but they were imprisoned in the secret vaults that her name might be kept fair. She has long struggled to hide the depot by building air castles over it, but alas! some great wag hath seen it and disclosed Plattsmouth's secret to the people by the Omaha Bee. He speaks therein as follows:

Plattsmouth is not ambitious to rival Nebraska City as a sensation and wild boy center. Her warm blood flounders through modest veins, and revolts at pica headedness and naked notoriety. This explains the slow-mule pace details of a recent astounding occurrence in that city. The ice gorge above Omaha last week, it appears reduced the river at Plattsmouth to a narrow gurgling stream. For several days an unusual commotion was noticed in the waters on the river front, but no attention was paid to it until late Thursday evening when a mooster of unsightly shape crawled on the sand bar and made for the shore. The people around the depot were paralyzed with fear, and for minutes that seemed hours they gazed immovably at the slimy, quivering beast. Suddenly the cry of "devil-fish" arose, broke the spell bound people and away to the hills they ran. Slowly the devil-fish, for such it seemed to be, approached the shore, its huge tentacles, yards in length, snifting the air and sand for something to devour. The river bank at this point is about fifteen feet high, fringed with railroad tracks, water tank and depot. Up to this bank the amphibious monster had fair sailing. A huge eye, as large as an ad-man's head after an all night's session, glared with demon-like joy from the center of its circular body. Up to the precipitous bank it came and wheeled the rubbish and rubble out of its path like a young cyclone. The huge arns circled ominously in the air, and fell upon the tracks and platform, scattering boxes and burrows right and left. At this moment the crowd on the hill-sides, realizing that a benefactor was near opened its throat, and with a mighty effort that shook the valleys and rattled the windows in Creapolis, cried out, "The depot is doomed." Meanwhile the monster vigorously whirled its dukes in search of a grip on the tottering tinder-box. The suckers pulled and snapped, but captured only cadaverous cockroaches and cobwebs, musty volumes of Missouri river rates and decayed editorial passes. The cry of unshackled joy rolled down with irresistible fury on the writhing beast, chilled its efforts and laid it flat on the bar, a mass of lifeless flesh or fish, covering a half acre of ground. For hours after no one ventured on the spot, finally Dr. Cook secured a posse of brave men and, armed with axes and sabers and lamps, marched to the river, followed by a wondering crowd. They dissected the beast in a few hours and found to their profound regret that the plans and specifications for a new depot had been swallowed by the beast, and, lodging in a vital spot, caused death. The hide of the monster, with its fringe of moss and barnacles, was captured by William Neville and will be cured and presented to the democratic club of the county, while the tentacles will be stuffed and presented to the enlightened and progressive managers of the B. & M. M. O'Rourke has been secured at great expense to patch up the rents on the levee and remove all traces of the last futile attack on a corporation carbuncle, which now promises to rot and rile the residents for generations.

The public will remember the Odd Fellows' entertainment on the evening of the 15th. The program will be out this week.

Court Notes.

Judge Chapman opened the December term of court this morning. The day was spent in arranging the docket, setting time for cases. A divorce case of Mrs. W. S. Boyd vs. W. S. Boyd was called and part of the testimony given, after which court adjourned. Deputy court clerk, J. C. Johnson, officiates in the absence of W. C. Schowalter, who is still confined to his home by sickness.

Among the bar from abroad are C. A. Woosley, of Greenwood; H. D. Travis and J. H. Haldeman, Weeping Water; Seth P. Rockwell, Louisville; Thos. O. Moon, Greenwood; J. B. Strode, Lincoln, and Chas. T. Graves, Rock Bluffs.

Lute Roades, who was arrested the 3d of November at Louisville charged with the theft of a horse belonging to James Ingram, and who has since been confined in jail here, was dismissed for lack of testimony.

M. Mc Elwain, L. C. Stiles, H. C. McMaken, Dave Miller and Dave Woodward were appointed as bailiffs.

Saturday afternoon the Lincoln city council and mayor were set at liberty, and they once more breathe the sweet air of freedom. Their release was accomplished by Senator Paddock and Congressman McShane and Mr. Lambertson who Saturday consulted Attorney General Garland. The attorney general ordered the marshal at Omaha to nominally place the prisoners in the custody of the deputy marshal at their homes until the case is finally decided by the court. Acting from this order they were released Saturday evening and sent to Lincoln where a grand banquet was given them.

War on Baldness.

A lecture was delivered recently in St. James' hall on the striking subject of "Trichology and Baldness." There is, it appears, a British Trichological association, whose president, Mr. G. W. Wheeler, delivered the address, and there is going to be, if it can be got up, a hospital for the treatment of hair diseases. War is thus to be made on bald heads. The advice to the possessors of Irish shillelagh—"when you see a bald head his life is modified in the case of "trichologists," with whom the new maxim is, "When you see a bald head study it." "When our hair or its appendage gets out of order it gives signs and symptoms of such." So says the learned president of the Trichological association. Science often awes us with an impressive obscurity of language, but we read on:

The upshot of it all is that the bald are to be deprived of the comfort and consolation of a modern theory that the hairy man is a survival of the savage, and that as civilization increases hair decays. The "signs and symptoms of such" are to be studied by a special class of men—the trichologists—with a view to restoring lost hair. "Why should hairdressers be allowed to humbug the public when there is a true science of trichology which would benefit mankind?" So asks Mr. Wheeler. Why, indeed? But is there no humbug elsewhere? The president of this association, which aspires to a charter and an examining body, does not "for a minute entertain the idea that trichologists ever make hair grow on all bald heads any more than our best physicians can raise the dead." He frankly adds that "trichology is a science considerably veiled in mystery." That being so, we will not have bald heads mocked.—London News.

Treatment of Writers' Cramp.

M. Wolf, one of the most eminent practitioners in Europe, has given special attention to this ailment for some five years past, and has been very successful in a majority of the large number of cases treated. The malady is not, he says, confined to writers, but may occur in any individual whose occupation brings into constant play one set of muscles—that is, the pianist, the telegrapher and the ballet dancer may suffer from these cramps, or from an inability to perform the acts peculiar to his occupation. The cramps are merely symptoms of a diseased condition, the exact seat of which is a matter of dispute, some locating it in the brain, others in the spinal cord, while there are those who regard the nerve centers as in no wise affected, but trace the source of the affection to the nerves themselves.

Wolf's method consists in the application of gymnastics, combined with massage, to the affected muscles; the rubbing and sometimes a gentle striking of the muscles with a wooden bar, together with regular movements of the fingers or other defective parts, are continued for several weeks, during which time not a morsel of food is daily devoted to these exercises.—New York Tribune.

A Shrewd Advertiser.

"My stars!" exclaimed a man, shoving some one who stood near him, "you have trod on my corn."

The fellow snatched out a box of ointment, and replied: "I can relieve you, sir, in a few minutes. Only ten cents. Indorsed by the medical fraternity everywhere. There is no use in suffering. One box! Thank you," he added, as he put the money in his pocket.

"It was an accident you found him," some one remarked to the shrewd dealer. "Oh, no, it wasn't. If you ask a man if he's got corns he don't want to talk to you, but when you find out that he's got 'em the chances of selling him medicine are good. I advertise my medicine by going into crowds and simply feeling for corns. Yonder stands a fat fellow. When the crowd gets thicker I'll go over and tap his hoof. Oh, yes, it may be painful, but, my dear sir, the business of this country must be carried on regardless of sentiment."—Arkansas Traveller.

A Needed Invention.

There was an invention patented a few years ago having trap doors opening inwardly in the floor of railroad cars. It seems as though it might be used to advantage in many cases, allowing exit when the car overturned, but, or fully, but the ends in contact with others.—Boston Budget.
