THE TRIBUNE AND THE TARIFF

RUSHVILLE, Ill., Jan. 7.—To the Editor of the Tribune: The editor of the Tribune tries to make it appear in his paper on the 5th that he differs with Sherman's war tariff speech, as he calls it.

I would say to the Tribune: You will find the truth of this conclusion in your own remarks where you say that under the high protective tariff wool was lower than it had been for thirty years, 25 cents per pound, and that when the duty was lowered it rose to 32 cents per pound.

The telegraph announces the fact, that the St. Paul sewer men and street cleaners marched in the great ice carnival with the implements of their trade; it must indeed have been very edifying to have marched along after a scavenger wagon to the tune of the "girl I left behind me."

Who is Your Best Friend? Your stomach of course. Why? Because if it is out of order you are one of the most miserable creatures living.

Cleveland himself in his famous message says that it is these duties that have enabled American manufacturers to make articles equal to the foreign article, and rendered it possible to sell as low as the foreign article with duties added.

Reduction in the tariff means freer entrance to all the products of foreign labor, or reduction of our price of labor; it means overstocking our markets to the exclusion of our home products; it means stopping our mills and mines, and flooding our farms with men now employed elsewhere; it means an over-supply of products of every kind of business and stepping back fifty years into hard work and poor pay; it means doubling up of revenue and making ruin everywhere.

The sugar trust is to be investigated by congress forthwith. It is said the sugar trust at the present time is paying a dividend of 12 per cent on a capital of sixty millions, while the actual capital controlled by the trust is only about twenty millions, which would make an interest rate of 36 per cent, amounting practically to highway robbery.

It is peculiarly proper that Senator Dave Turpie, from Indiana, should rush to the support and defense of the ballot box stuffers at Indianapolis. Though it is a disgusting spectacle to see a United States senator defending crimes against the government, which he should assist in persecuting.

Another exceedingly interesting set of specimens are the axes, of which there is a large number of examples. Among them are a few, which Professor Bickmore states he considers to be probably unique. These are stone battle axes, with a pointed end like an awl, instead of the usual flat edge.

Teaching of the Hand. Careful manual training is one of the few good things that are good for everybody. It is good for the rich boy, to teach him respect for the dignity of beautiful work.

Native Vegetable Products. In visits to nearly forty tribes of American Indians, Dr. J. S. Newberry has found twenty-three kinds of native vegetable products included in the Indian dietary, besides a great variety of nuts and vegetables.—Arkansas Traveler.

Working in a Mustard Mill. I am employed in a mustard mill, where we daily grind hundreds of bushels of the strongest mustard seeds, then sifting it and preparing it for the trade. We also grind peppers and spices, occasionally preparing cayenne pepper.

CLIFF DWELLERS OF ARIZONA.

A Fine Collection of Relics, Showing Their Life and Habits.

Professor Albert S. Bickmore, the superintendent of the American Museum of Natural History, at Seventy-eighth street and Eighth avenue, the other afternoon showed a reporter an exceedingly interesting collection which was received at the museum within a few days.

From the great depth at which the articles were found, the immense lapse of time since these villages were in active operation and teeming with life, may be estimated. Some of the articles were found at depths ranging from two to six feet; in the caves they were covered with dust and guano formed by the millions of bats which inhabit these dreary recesses.

Among the most interesting specimens in the collection just received are seven large lava or sandstone mortars, called metates by the Indians of the present day. They were and are still used by the modern Mexicans for grinding corn (maize), preparatory to making it into cakes.

Besides these articles already noticed, the collection includes pieces of wicker and basket work, almost as it came from the hand of the maker, specimens of corn grains and cobs, ends, bone awls and pins, stone arrow and spear points, fashioned both from splinters of obsidian (volcanic glass) and from chalcedony hammers, arrow sharpeners, stone knives and many other articles made both from stone and bone, whose uses are sometimes not wholly clear even to the skilled archeologist.

It Pays to Observe Trifles. A case of alleged literary piracy which has just been settled in New York hinged on the age of a certain manuscript. The accused man had nothing but his own word to support his side of the case until a close observer discovered that the water mark of the paper on which the article was written was of an old device, and a little research established the fact that the paper bearing the water mark was not made after 1859.

In other lines than surgery the value of the germ theory is even greater, though at first sight not quite so apparent, since the matter is yet in its infancy. The great advantage which we are to acquire through this theory is not in curing infectious diseases, but in preventing them.
