LIFE IN CUBA.

Bandits and Police on Good Terms with One Another—An Incident.
My three days' stay at a friend's plantation enabled me to see in all its shocking reality how intimately the bandits and police are leagued. My host is a firm believer in the axiom that "prudence is the best part of valor," and he voluntarily doubled the tribute the bandits asked of him. "You can come to my place in safety," he wrote to me in answer to my question as to the probabilities of my being kidnaped, "for I pay my contribution regularly and the bandits have promised to respect my friends. My experience has taught me to fear the police more than the bandits, for the latter, at least, are satisfied with a stimulated gun and keep their word, whereas the former are insatiable and never fulfill their promise."
The bandits and the police barfacedly parade the streets arm in arm. Seated on the piazza of the house at dusk my host pointed out to me the brigand chief, who, with a group of friends, came to my house every evening to visit the gambling houses, as the stakes of their inferiors in the band are not sufficiently high to excite any interest in them. The chief strutted into the grounds the evening after my arrival while my host and I were seated at our favorite place, and I was introduced to him. He greeted my companion familiarly and bowed low as my name was mentioned, eyeing me closely all the while, though he pretended not to see my outstretched hand. He was tall, spare and agile; his long hair was thrown back from a high forehead, and the blackest pair of eyes I have ever seen gazed at me with a wary face. His small and well kept hands, whose dainty finger tips revealed the professional gambler, toyed nervously with his black and flowing mustache, while he told us of his losses at the gaming table the night before. On learning I was to leave the following night he promised to send one of his men with me to see me safely to the railway station. As I hesitated in accepting his offer, he forced me to acquiesce by telling me it would be much safer for me, "for," said he, with a sweet smile, "all of my men do not know you as well as I, and the escort will only cost you an ounce." (17.) Without giving me time to thank him he bade us good night and strode rapidly away. My friend calmed my fears by assuring me the fellow's word could be relied on, and while we smoked a good habano he entertained me with a recital of this bandit's adventures and crimes.

As I expressed surprise at the bandit's refusing my proffered hand, he explained to me that hand shaking among that class is considered a most sacred thing, and signifies either an acknowledgment of debt and a promise of payment, or a sign of life long friendship. They cannot shake hands while they are in debt, and, as he had told us of his losses at the game, his conduct became clear to me. At the appointed hour a rough and murderous looking wretch presented himself at the plantation and accompanied me to the train. Through everything passed off smoothly, I freely confess that when I reached my old quarters in this city I breathed easier. The state of utter helplessness to which respectable persons have been reduced is one of the saddest results of this pernicious government, and it does not need much argument to prove that the perpetually increasing strength of the bandits is a serious menace to our social fabric.—Cor. New York Sun.

Sanitary Negligence in Italy.
Not only among the lower classes does one find an absolute disregard for all sanitary laws, huge underground receptacles which fill the buildings above with noxious and poisonous gases being in universal use. Care is not often considered necessary, but when it becomes imperative the contents of these infernal reservoirs are pumped into carts to be taken away, the pipes passing through the rooms and hallways as the only means of escape. After the terrible cholera scourge in 1884 the parliament voted Naples 100,000 lire as a subsidy to enable the city to take hygienic precautions against a second visitation, but the money is being used for purposes of embellishment, and as yet nothing has been done toward improving its sanitary condition.

The whole nation looks stunted in size, and as though vitiated through and through by an inheritance of loathsome diseases. In one day in the streets of any Italian city one can see a wider variety of disgusting deformities than in ten years in Chicago, not to take into account the sore eyes with which the lower orders seem universally afflicted. The streets are nicely paved and well swept, but are full of offensive sights and vile odors, no regard for public decency being apparent. One may look in vain throughout the length and breadth of this beautiful peninsula for a single spot wherein can be found that cleanliness which is akin to godliness, and equally vain will be his search for anything approaching honesty or fair dealing. Wholesale frauds such as are perpetrated in our country are seldom heard of, but misrepresentation and petty pilfering have not so often been designated national traits without good reason, the Italians thinking perhaps the splendor of their sky and scenery is all sufficient.—Florence Cor. Chicago Times.

Cremation of City Garbage.
The terrible poisoning of rivers and streams, by dumping into them the garbage of cities and large towns, has become so dangerous that some devices are sought to avoid the danger, and those of incinerating the garbage. Several European cities have carried sewerage and garbage to public fields, to be utilized on a systematic plan. The latest device is to cremate the garbage in furnaces specially constructed for that purpose. Chicago has inaugurated the plan from the necessity. England has largely put the plan into practice, and is well satisfied. Forty-five English towns are already using furnaces. The Chicago furnace disposes of fifty tons a day. Dr. J. M. Keating, of Memphis, says: "There is no real safety but by cremation," and he is sure that Yankee ingenuity, now on the right track, will furnish the best and cheapest furnace. It is evident to casual observers that our streets must not any longer suffer pollution. Epidemics of the worst sort may be expected from such a source.—Globe-Democrat.

The pain from a felon can be at once relieved by smoking woolen rags. Place the rags under an inverted flower pot and put coals upon them, or set on fire some other way, then hold the felon over the smoke and it will extract all the pain.

Confidence in the Bartender.

Did you ever think how very much talk is lurled at a bartender? He has to listen to all kinds of people talking on all kinds of subjects. Frequent drinking makes a glib tongue, and matters that might be regarded as state secrets outside the bar room are there discussed with a shocking lack of reserve. The funny part of it is that the bartender is taken seriously into the discussion and his opinions are treated as of great respect and authority by persons who, when sober, have in companionship with the mixer of drinks. Think of a man taking his business affairs, his family affairs, his love affairs, to be submitted to the judgment of a bartender, and you will have in mind what actually happens very, very often. Place a white aproned man behind a whisky bar, and he becomes, in many instances, the leader in thought and expression of those who exchange money for drinks over the two feet of walnut board that separates them.—Bartender in Globe-Democrat.

Manufacturing Imitation Mummies.
A gentleman from Portland, Ore., who has just returned from an extended foreign tour, was asked why he had not brought home from Egypt, among other curios, a mummy. He said there was a great deal of fraud in the mummy business. Persons purchasing mummies, of course, like to get them as well preserved and natural looking as possible, and as these found are generally in a more or less dilapidated condition, vendors have engaged in the business of manufacturing bogus mummies. They bargain with camp, beggars and such people for their carcasses, paying therefor a sum sufficient to make their remaining days short and sweet. These fellows are preserved and pickled, and then smoked until they are good imitations of the genuine mummy. Whole rows of these articles can be seen in a smoke house at once. When sufficiently dry they are wrapped in mummy cloth and sold to Americans chiefly, bringing a high price.—Cleveland Leader.

Bathers in Oiled Silk.
The latest fad among bathers is to wear costumes lined with oiled silk. This was told us a secret by a young lady to whom was propounded the interrogatory why she was able to stay in the water so long. You see, the oiled silk prevents the water from penetrating, and enables the bather to stay in the water a long time without becoming cold. This new innovation was gotten up through a wager between two ladies as to which could stay in the longest, and one of them, through natural ingenuity, bought herself of oiled silk, and won the wager. While her rival emerged from the briny with chattering teeth, the other bobbed up in the water serenely and smiling.—San Francisco Post.

American Lamps in Paris.
When people prate of novelties found only in Paris, confound them by stating that the tall lamps which decorate fashionable drawing rooms are unknown to the conservative Parisian households. Two of these "piano lamps," as they are sometimes called, were carried over as gifts in June and set up in one of the most elegant apartments in Paris, where they instantly created a sensation. French taste has been forced to admit that American taste is to the front in the matter of lamps at least.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Firemen, letter carriers and others whose occupation keeps them on their feet a great deal, often are troubled with chafed, sore and blistered feet, especially in extremely hot weather, no matter how comfortably their shoes may fit. A powder is used in the German army for affording to the shoes and stockings of the foot soldiers, called "Fussstreupulver," and consists of three parts salicylic acid, ten parts starch and eighty-seven parts pulverized soapstone. It keeps the feet dry, prevents chafing and rapidly heals sore spots. Finely pulverized soapstone alone is very good.—Scientific American.
