A SCHOOL BOY'S BIOCRAPHY

(FOR THE HERALD.) Lutle screaming, crying child, Crying just because it can; "Hush my darl ng," mother says, "Hush and be a little man,"

Little hands on mischief bent, Little feet that run astray; Little hurts and little tears, Nought but trouble all the day.

Little boy now goes to school His youthful mind to knowledge store. He don't like books, but e teles flies.

Or aughs and other tricks, so many more, And even on till quite a lad We see him waste his time, While mother hopes quite against hope, Industrious boy: A man sublime.

And now he's nearing manhood days Misfortune meets him every-where ; Father's dead and mother's sick ; He has no work ; snow flies in air.

Just o'er the way a school house stands. Where went last winter sixty scholars. This fall there is no school as yet; No man to teach for fifty dollars. He knew of other places too Prefessional men were in demand. Mechanics, elerks, experienced men

The young man sat with downerst look While all these thoughts ran through his brain.

He says, (Imagine if you con?)
"I wish I were a buy again. I'd go to school and learn my books; I'd all my time to study give; My schooling done I'd learn a trade Then I would be prepared to live.

And Oh! What good I might have been, If all my time I had improved? I'd be warth something to myself, And credit be to my beloved.

But now alas! A man I am. My chances all for school are past. Small sisters three, mother, and me, Upon the cold, dark world are cast

And now my friends, said he, I'll write, That you may warning from it 'ake. Improve your youth which he'er returns, That you a noble n an may make O. T. W.
