

SECOND YEAR

Stanley is All Right.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—A Zinzibar dispatch says: A letter dated Stanley Falls, August 29, has been delivered here by Tipoo Tib's men. They state that a letter was received at Stanley Falls from Henry M. Stanley in August, 1888. Stanley was then at Bonvala, on the Aruini, where he had arrived August 17. He had left Emin Pasha eighty-two days before in perfect health and provided with plenty of food. Stanley had returned to Bonvala for stores in charge of his rear guard, and intended to leave ten days later to join Emin.

The West African Telegraph Company has received the following dispatch from St. Thomas, dated Friday, 2 p. m.: "I have just received information that Henry M. Stanley, with Emin Pasha, has arrived in the Aruini. The news is reliable. Further details will follow."

[Signed.] "PARSONS, Agent." In Stanley Falls, the advices stated, Stanley wrote that Emin was in possession of vast stores of ivory and many oxen, and that he had an abundance of food. Stanley intended to leave Bonvala at the end of August.

A Protective Principle

NEW YORK, Dec. 22.—Among the passengers on the steamer Australia, from Gibraltar November 29, which arrived yesterday, was Moses Benasulim, who comes to this country to prefer charges against W. Reed Lewis, United States consul at Tangiers, and his two assistants. Benasulim says that Consul Lewis conspired to place him in prison at Feze, where he lay for fifty days, because he refused to pay $5,000 for the "protection of the United States government," while engaged in piloting American merchants, being a merchant himself, through the country to make purchases. He gives the names of fellow merchants who, he claims, were swindled out of sums ranging from $185 to $3,500, by Consul Lewis and his assistants. He estimates that in his two years of service Lewis has collected from merchants for American protection not less than $20,000.

Daring and Successful Jail Delivery in Washington Territory.

PORT TOWNSEND, W. T., Dec. 22.—The most daring and successful jail delivery ever perpetrated on the sound occurred last Thursday night. Thomas Hunter, the jailer, was in one of the cells where five prisoners were confined, when they suddenly overpowered and gagged him, relieving him of his keys and pistols before he could raise an alarm. Within a few minutes the five criminals had opened the other doors and were fleeing for liberty, after locking the jailer and one trusty prisoner in a cell. As soon as they could release themselves the alarm was given. The crimes for which the men were incarcerated were attempts at murder, grand larceny and highway robbery. Posses were at once organized and the neighboring ports notified of the delivery.

A Powerful Naval Gun

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 22.—An important experiment was successfully made at the naval academy proving grounds yesterday. A steel pointed iron projectile weighing 250 pounds was fired from one of the steel breech-loading rifle guns of the new cruiser Chicago, which penetrated a steel target ten inches thick and cut through the solid oak back. The experiment is considered as likely to have an important bearing on modern naval warfare.

A Warehouse Blown Up.

WICHITA, Kan., Dec. 22.—Two terrific explosions, with an interval between them of but a few seconds, was heard about 9 o'clock, and the large milling warehouse of J. P. Wilcox was enveloped in flames. The force of the explosion blew out the walls and caved in the roof. All the contents were destroyed. The explosive was placed beneath the building. There is no clue to the perpetrators.

A Mule Fell on His Leg.

COLUMBUS, Neb., Dec. 22.—Peter Heggen, a young man in the employ of Barns and Wagner, two farmers living five miles northwest of here, had his leg crushed and mangled in a frightful manner this evening while riding after cattle on a mule. The animal slipped and fell on his leg, with the above result.

For Illegal Liquor-Selling

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Dec. 22.—Her man Wachendorf, of Talmage, charged by the village board with selling liquor without a license, had his trial here before County Judge Mapes, and was bound over to the district court in the sum of $500.

—THE DAILY HERALD delivered for 15c. per week.

Eloped With a Telegraph Operator

VALPARAISO, Neb., Dec. 21.—Joseph Robinson and Miss Anna Magee eloped from this place at noon today. They started from a school house about two miles west of town, where Miss Magee was teaching, walked to the railroad, flagged the west bound passenger, and got aboard. Robinson has lately been discharged from the employ of the railroad company here, where he had acted as operator for several years. The young lady is about seventeen, and is the daughter of J. L. Magee, of our leading merchants. The family is nearly distracted with grief over the occurrence.

Three Things to Do.

I recall what Count Tolstoi said as to the political outlook. I put the question to him, "Suppose the emperor were to ask you what he should do, what would you say?" He was silent for a time; then he said, "I am praying to God to give me wisdom to make the right answer."

Then, after another pause, he replied, "I would say:

"Nationalize the land.

"Declare absolute liberty of conscience.

"And establish the liberty of the press.

"If he did these three, all the rest would come right."—W. T. Stead in New York Mail and Express.

The First in Mississippi.

FEMININE ROMEO'S.

College Girls Who Fall in Love with and Adore Each Other.

"Perhaps love fever is not a disease, but we think it one. It is very prevalent in all of the colleges for girls, particularly so at Vassar, Smith and Wellesley, and it is claiming the very serious attention of the college faculties."

This rather startling revelation was made by a professor, and a feminine one, who has taught in all three colleges, and is at present connected with a fashionable boarding school in this city.

"I remember well when I was a girl and first read 'Elsie Venner,'" she continued. "You remember Dr. Holmes says a girl must love something. I laughed the idea to scorn. But in my experience of teaching I have found his statement to be exactly true. Girls who are kept from proper masculine society fall in love with each other, and sometimes go to the most absurd extremes."

"Oh! then you do not mean that college girls fall in love with men?" said a Journal reporter who was an interested listener to the conversation.

"Nothing so natural, my dear," said the little professor, with a fine look out of her big gray eyes. "They fall in love with each other. One girl is always the lover and pursues the other with attentions, notes, flowers and similar tokens of love, and I have known them to be so jealous that—well, really, it made me tremble to think of the consequences."

"There was a pretty, blue eyed girl in my Saxon literature class who fell frantically in love with a tall, serious, dark eyed girl who was taking the scientific course. This little creature used to sit at the head of the stairs for three hours every evening until Eleanor, the dark eyed girl, would come from her laboratory work, and then she would run down to meet her, and insist on making her a cup of chocolate over her gas stove, on braiding Eleanor's long hair each night and doing a hundred other services. If Eleanor showed the least unusual attention to any other girl my little blue eyes would almost cry her pretty orbs out. She did not get over her infatuation until one Commencement day, when she met a dark eyed young man whom she afterward married."

"But isn't that an exceptional case?" asked one of her listeners.

"Not at all. It is only one of many. Only last year I had two girls in my class in natural philosophy, both handsome and spirited, and they took a violent fancy each for the other. They had lent fancy each for the other. They had to sit side by side, they exchanged rings and locks of hair, used to write each other every day, and send each other flowers. One day the older of the two took a small cluster of violets from a pretty girl in the senior class and wore them all day in her corsage. Then there was serious trouble. The younger went into hysterics, and for almost a week was very ill. These two girls left college at the same time and vowed always to live together. But I heard one of them had married within a year."

"It is extremely dangerous, I know," said an old dowager who was present, "to have only one man to a hundred girls at a summer resort. Almost every girl will fall in love with that man, but I thought young women cultivating their intellects were above such things."

"Not at all," said the little professor. "They have brains, of course, but they also have hearts. For my part, I believe in co-education. I went to a university where men and girls studied in the same class rooms. The girls were able to see many kinds of men, and to fall in love, about them. They did not fall in love, as the saying is, with each other or with the young men, but studied their lessons and enjoyed the society of both sexes—the rational young women."

At Vassar college and at Smith, also the students are cautioned by the professors against the practice of "falling in love" with each other, and jealousy of one girl's attentions to another is vigorously preached down.—New York Journal.

Tests of Civilization.

What shall one take as a typical test of civilization? No coast in the world is better lighted and buoyed than that of Japan; nowhere are life and property more secure; in no country is universal courtesy so natural and so certain. As for the art of Japan, it is that of the exquisite drawings and lacquer and silk and faience and silver and bronze that were produced here before America was discovered. Why, in the very winter that Columbus hoisted his sail the famous Yoshimasa was inaugurating a new departure with new luxury in the Chama-ya or tea drinking ceremony, probably the most elaborate and polished ceremonial that has ever been devised. And the splendid gardens of Gin-kaku and Kin-kaku—"the pavilions of silver and gold"—at Kyoto, remain to this day monuments of the same Yoshimasa's taste. But these, although they antedate the new world, are but modern here, for before William the Conqueror crossed the channel and founded at Hastings the England that we know, the Count of Nara was the focus of a marvelous art and a magnificent life which are among the inspirations of Japanese history.—Cor. Philadelphia Times.

How to Dignify the Mechanical Arts.

We have seen how the literary education which we now consider so essential was regarded in England—as ungentlemanly. It is not so long since the physician or leech was, as Hallam says, "an inexhaustible theme of popular ridicule." The barber's pole, so common in our streets, recalls a time, not so long past, when the barber practiced bloodletting and other medical arts. It is within our own memory that the dentist stood on a level with the barber; indeed, the two were often the same person. How is it that all this is changed; that literature, medicine and dentistry have become gentlemanly occupations? Simply, I think, because they are now taught scientifically and institutions have been established for that purpose. It may be laid down as a general rule that whatever is taught in school will soon become respectable and gentlemanly, while that which is picked up in the home or the workshop will always be regarded as menial.—Professor Thomas Davidson in The Forum.

BROKEN HEARTS.

There are broken hearts in the world today. Though smiling faces hide them; They pass and re-pass on the old highway, With stifled grief beside them. The wan, white face of the woman who knows That she must wander apart From the soul where not even pity glows, With a proud but broken heart.

There are broken hearts in the world today. Beneath warm furs and lace; Black December gnaws at those hearts, though May Smiles in the dauntless faces. The resolute eyes of the man we see By day in the busy mart; Look down in the night through his soul, and he Looks into a broken heart.

There are broken hearts in the world today. For all the cynic's laughter; The warm hearts that were red and growing gray. Hope and a Youth went after. But the sun comes up and the world goes round And all of us play our parts. But over as well as under the ground There are dead and broken hearts. —John Ernest McCann in New York Mercury.

The Rights of Children.

A bright little girl of 4½ years was out on the sidewalk in Brooklyn with her brother, who was 6. He left her for a few minutes and she started to go alone across the street at the crossing, when an ice wagon ran over and killed her. Her father sued the ice company for damages and got a verdict. The company carried the case to the court of appeals, where its lawyers claimed that it was gross negligence for a parent to allow a little child to go into the street or on to the sidewalk without some competent person to take care of it. The court decides that it is not negligence to do so, and holds the company liable in damages. Here is what Judge Earl says on the subject:

Hundreds of young children are permitted with general safety, and must be permitted in cities, to amuse themselves on the sidewalks, and they cannot always be attended by persons of discretion. The highest prudence would doubtless require that they should be so guarded, but it cannot be said as a matter of law that ordinary prudence forbids that a bright child, 4½ years old, properly instructed and cautioned, should go unattended on a sidewalk for diversion.—Washington Star.

Christmas at Plymouth—1621.

In writing the history of Plymouth colony Governor Bradford closes the record for 1621 with this paragraph: "And here I shall end this year; only I shall remember one passage more, rather of mirth than of weight. On the day called Christmas day the governor called them out to work (as was used), but the most of this new company excused themselves, and said it went against their consciences to work on that day."

"So the governor told them that if they made it matter of conscience, he would spare them till they were better informed. So he led away the rest and left them; but when they came home at noon from their work he found them in the streets at play openly—some pitching the ball, and some at stool ball and such like sports. So he went to them, and took away their implements, and told them that it was against his conscience that they should play and others work. "If they made the keeping of it matter of devotion, let them keep their houses, but there should be no gaming or revelling in the streets."

The thing particularly to be noticed in this brief mention of that early Christmas in New England is that the governor speaks of it as "the day called Christmas Day." By this he intimates that it is not such in reality, and that there is no good authority for regarding this as the anniversary of our Lord's birth.

Many a goose will be seen at the Christmas dinner table, and unfortunately he won't be on the platter either in every case.
