THE STORM IN CANADA.

The Late Storm Takes a Trip Across the Border.

MONTREAL, Jan. 12.—The tail end of the cyclone, which struck Western Ontario Wednesday night, reached here about midnight. It played sad havoc with chimneys, telegraph poles and wires. Its full strength passed some sixty miles north of here out to Labrador and Atlantic, leaving a swath of debris behind. The only news received from Lower Ontario is from the incoming trains. It will take a week to restore telegraphic communication. Four houses were unroofed at Moulintette. On the Corn wall canal Oscar Barwick, jr., was instantly killed, every barn was razed and forty head of cattle were killed. A party of lumbermen had their huts swept away and two of their were so badly injured by falling trees that their lives are despaired of.

At Trenton, Gilmour's mills were damaged to the extent of $60,000 and the Queen's hotel unroofed. The bridge from Trenton to Gilmour was swept away, Alexander Allen drowned. The wind blew at the rate of seventy miles all Wednesday night and did not fall below forty miles any time yesterday. Wrecks of barns, outhouses, etc., literally strewn the tracks of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific roads. No freight trains are moving, and the passenger trains are run only with the greatest difficulty. The thermometer fell 40 degrees in ten hours and every thing is frozen up. Business is at a standstill and desolation is on all sides.

George Simpson, a brakeman on the Kingston and Pembroke railroad, was blown from the train near Smith Falls and sustained fatal injuries. It is estimated damage done by the storm in Ontario and Quebec will aggregate $3,000,000.

No communication can be had with the back counties. It is feared that the loss of life and property has been very large. Whole forests are uprooted on the upper Ottawa and it is feared that many lumbermen's camps have been destroyed and the men either killed or injured by falling trees.

The Pittsburg Horror.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 12.—The work of recovering the victims of Wednesday's disaster is not yet completed. For two days and two nights 100 men and 50 teams have been constantly at work, and up to 10 o'clock this morning the mangled remains of fourteen persons have been taken from the ruins. Four more are known to have been buried in the ruins, and six others are missing. Of the injured three have died since removal to the hospitals. Four others are in a critical condition and will not survive during the night the bodies of Charles McEwen and two unknown workmen were recovered, and at daylight the remains of the venerable Rev. Dr. Reed, who was in Weldin's store when the accident occurred, were found on the first floor of the building, frightfully crushed. The funerals of four victims took place today, and others will be buried tomorrow.

The damage to property by the accident is estimated at $125,000. The coroner's jury began its investigation at 10 o'clock this morning.

Wrecked by a Monster Wave.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—Sailor George Thompson, of Camden, Me., arrived in this city today and reports the loss of the brigantine Snow Bird, of New Brunswick, her captain, Thomas Bennett, and second mate, George Scott, both of New Haven. The Snow Bird sailed from Eastport, Me., December 18, with a cargo of lumber for this city. The night of December 21 the sea was very rough. The Snow Bird was then ninety miles out off Montank Point. At daylight an immense wave swept the vessel and Captain Bennett was washed from his post at the wheel and was never afterwards seen. The wreck of the Snow Bird has not been seen since. She has probably gone to pieces.

"ITALY OF AMERICA."

A Former Resident of Plattsmouth Graphically Describes Maricopa County, Arizona.

J. W. Marshall, formerly postmaster of this city and who is well known in this part of the state, writes a letter to his old friend, J. W. Hesser, of this city: TEMPE, MARICOPA COUNTY, ARIZ., January 1st, 1889.

DEAR FRIEND HESSER:—I promised to write you and send you some literature descriptive of this "Italy of America." Have only been here ten days, and the first five days the whole country was flooded with rain and even now the roads are very muddy in places, still I have been driven some fifty miles about this place and Phoenix. I find the country much more developed than I had expected, there is about 60,000 acres in cultivation, over 70,000,000 pounds of wheat and barley was raised here in the Salt River Valley this year past. Fruit culture is only in its infancy as yet, but there are some orchards eight years old, planted by Mormons. I saw yesterday in the chamber of commerce at Phoenix the fruit display that was on exhibition at the Territorial fair this fall, it makes a grand show, all the citrus fruits grapes, raisins, almonds English walnuts, etc.; one sweet potato weighed twenty pounds, another cluster of sweet potatoes all fast to one vine weighed thirty pounds. There are however many lovely young orchards of peaches, apricots and grapes from one to three years old. This country will surely rival Southern California in fruits in a few years. It is only necessary that the actual facts regarding the superior conditions of climate, soil, abundance of water for irrigation, the early ripening of our fruits and harvests etc. etc., be generally known when, in my opinion, there will be a general rush to this vast valley and it will literally "blossom as the rose." Roses are now in bloom out doors, and olanders, what wonderful growths they do make; fan palms only five years old from the seed, eighteen inches across the stalk, twelve to fifteen feet high and the same breadth of top of leaves. Our first frost, only a light one, came on the 29th of December; we have no fire in our house only our gasoline stove to cook on. But the greatest revelation to me, after days of travel over the barren plains of Texas and Mexico and Arizona was when I left the Southern Pacific road at Maricopa, only twenty-six miles south and in forty minutes came to this green valley with its barley and alfalfa in all stages of growth from that just coming out of the ground and two feet high, and see the enormous ricks of hay, some of them 200 and 300 feet long, the product as I afterwards learned, of four successive cuttings during the season, and the hundreds and thousands of cattle contentedly feeding on these same fields that have produced four crops of hay, the fields of course all bordered with sparkling running brooks and cottonwood and fig trees, the latter now have their third crop on and are about half grown but will not ripen as we are to have some frost now for a few weeks. The leaves on the cottonwoods are green as in July in Nebraska. Twenty-five thousand head of steers have been brought into this valley from the plains to be fattened on the alfalfa grass and hay this winter; many of these cattle are of high grade. It is a novel and interesting sight for one fresh from the north to see two or three hundred head of these cattle on a field of green clover of 80 or 160 acres. One acre is said to be ample for from two to three head; six tons of alfalfa hay is the average per acre. It is now selling for $8 to $10 per ton. Farmers readily get $1 per head per month for winter pasture, so you can easily figure the profit. However, this land is two valuable for fruits to remain for any considerable time devoted to agriculture, even at so great a profit. But to take the water out of the salt river miles and miles above and bring it down onto these lands in the great canals, and spread and divide it in hundreds and hundreds of small and lateral ditches, costs time and money. A "water right" 100 inches is sufficient for 160 acres, and from the Tempe Canal, which is a mutual organization, costs from $1,200 to $2,000 to buy, and after that about 80 cents an acre per year is assessed and goes to keep the canal in order. These farms can be had at from $40 to $100 per acre. The buildings are mostly of adobe, but make a good house when covered with shingles and plastered and papered, as some of them are. Generally, however, they are covered with adobe and are a sorry looking habitation. Lumber is very high as yet; common is worth $35 to $40 per M. As it all comes from California, on account of a lack of railroad facilities reaching into our own extensive forests of pine, juniper and spruce, and in hard wood the black walnut, wild cherry, ash, white and red oaks. The pine grows 150 feet high, 5 and 6 feet in diameter, and often 75 feet to the first branches. Arizona has 20,000 square miles of these forests. The Atlantic and Pacific R. R. traverses a portion of it, and vast quantities of the sawed lumber is now taken to the Pacific coast and into New Mexico over this road. But we shall soon be connected by rail with these forests and then have cheap lumber. Excellent brick are made here and sell at the kiln at $7 per M. I have seen here great forests of cactus 10 to 20 feet high, and 12 to 20 inches in diameter; many of them with arms but generally like a cone, or round-topped straight pole, only you would not undertake to "climb this cactus pole." Phoenix is a nice town of 6,300 with several miles of street car lines, electric lights and all modern improvements. It is to have the capital this winter, so say the political doctors.

Your Old Friend,
J. W. MARSHALL.

Tripping Bogus Critics.

A St. Paul gentleman, who many years ago was a resident of Cincinnati, tells a story concerning Powers, the sculptor, which has probably never been in print. There were at that time in Cincinnati two or three connoisseurs in art who assumed a sort of general censorship in such matters, and everything that they said concerning works of art was supposed to "go." They had unfavorably criticised some of Powers' work, and he did not take much stock in their dictations anyway, he decided to show them up to the art people of the city. He was working some in wax and announced a reception at which he would show some of the latest products of his genius. Among the figures was one representing the mayor of the city. It stood in a niche by itself, with the light arranged for the best effect. The high muckmucks of the art world of Cincinnati attended the reception. They examined the figure of the mayor and made comment on it. "The hands," remarked one, "do not reveal any anatomy." "The legs are a trifle short," said another, "but otherwise I consider it a very fine figure." And so they went on. One of them finally discovered that something was wrong about the bridge of the nose, and raised his hand to point out the defect. "Damn you, don't you pinch my nose," cried the alleged wax "figure" to their astonishment, dismay and complete overthrow as art critics. The sculptor had induced the real live mayor to help him in his little scheme.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

The Millionaire Mother of a Socialist.

One of the richest women in the world, the Duchess of Galliera, died in Paris. Her grave was the daughter and heiress of the Marquis de Brignoles, a rich Genoese nobleman. She years ago married the Duke de Galliera, who was very wealthy, but their fortune was enormously increased by judicious speculations. Some idea of the Duchess of Galliera's riches and benevolence can be formed when it is said that her husband gave £1,000,000 to the city of Genoa to enlarge the port, and the duchess £2,000,000 to build a new hospital—the most magnificent in Europe—to enlarge five streets and to restore churches and charitable institutions. She also presented to her native city her palace, the celebrated Palazzo Rosso, with its superb collection of Van Dyckes and other pictures by the great masters. In Paris she endowed a museum of art, an orphanage and other charitable institutions, and she is well known also to have purchased back a good deal of the Spanish estates of the Duc de Montpensier, which she presented to him many years ago. The only son and heir of this lady, Signor Ferrari, he refuses the title of duke—is a well known socialist, whereas the duchess herself was an extreme Royalist.—London Court Journal.

A Large Organ.

A correspondent of La Science en Famille states that in the Protestant church at Libau, Russia, there is an organ which occupies the whole width of the church, about 60 feet, and which has 31 registers, 3,000 pipes and 14 bellows of large size. It has 4 harpsichords and 1 pedal. The largest pipe is formed of planks 3 inches thick and 31 feet in length, and has a section of 7 square inches, and weighs 1,540 pounds. Besides the 131 registers, there are 21 accessory stops that permit of combining various parts of the instrument without having direct recourse to the registers. By a special pneumatic combination, the organist can couple the four harpsichords and obtain surprising results. For the sake of comparison the following large instruments of this kind may be cited: Organ of the cathedral of Riga, 125 registers; Garden City cathedral, 120; St. Albert Hall, London, 100; Cathedral of Ulm, 100; St. George's Hall, Liverpool, 100; Notre Dame, Paris, 90; Boston cathedral, 86; Cathedral of Schwerin, 85; St. Nicholas church, Leipzig, 85; Cologne cathedral, 42.—Scientific American.

A spring of natural cologne has broken forth in the southern part of Algiers. The liquid has not been analyzed, but its odor is very similar to that of patchouli.

A survivor of the Light Brigade is said to be a plumber in Indianapolis. Of course it has occurred to everybody that he learned how to charge in the Crimea. The charges of the electric light brigade have astonished Boston and promise to become historical.—Boston Transcript.
