The Inaugural Address Read From

the Thousands Standing in the Rain.

Proceedings of the Day.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—With simple and solemn ceremony in the presence of all the wisdom and authority embodied in the co-ordinate branches of the government, and surrounded by representatives of all the great nations on the globe, Benj. Harrison was today introduced into the highest office within the gift of the American people.

Harrison accompanied by the inauguration committee, was taken in a closed carriage drawn by four grey horses to the White house about half past ten o'clock. The rain pouring down in torrents drove many of the streets and made sorry the work of decoration. Arriving at the White house Harrison was received by Cleveland and his cabinet in the blue parlor, where they were joined by Morton at 11 o'clock. Cleveland and Harrison took carriages for the Capitol. The first carriage was an open landau and contained Cleveland, Harrison, Hoar and Cockrell. The second contained Morton and Cullom. Mrs. Cleveland witnessed the departure from the window. The carriages then moved out and the Seventieth Indiana veterans formed a guard of honor, one section before and one behind.

At 11:35 the party arrived at the east portico of the capitol building amid the cheers of the assembled crowd. Upon reaching the portico the party alighted and President Cleveland, leaning on the arm of Senator Cockrell and President-elect Harrison on the arm of Senator Hoar ascended the steps amidst the repeated huzzas of the crowd. The second carriage next stopped at the stair case and Vice President Morton, leaning on the arm of Senator Cullom, followed the previous party. President-elect Harrison and Vice President-elect Morton acknowledged the applause of the multitude by raising their hats and bowing.

IN THE SENATE.

At one minute to 12 Capt Bassat announced the president of the United States and a great hush fell. President Cleveland entered arm in arm with Senator Cockrell, followed by members of his cabinet, taking seats near the clerk's desk, the assemblage standing until all were seated. Gen. Harrison, on the arm of Senator Hoar, walked with his companion to the seat provided at President Cleveland's right, the audience again rising to their feet. The same ceremony was repeated with President-elect Morton. Before taking his seat he was sworn in by Mr. Ingalls, who walked arm in arm with Senator Cullom.

At 1:59 a. m. President (pro tem) Ingalls rose and closed the fiftieth congress. Immediately upon the relinquishment of the chair by Senator Ingalls, Vice-President Morton ascended the chair and called the senate of the fifty-first congress to order in special session. After calling the session the new senators were sworn in, and then the procession proceeded to the rotunda of the capitol.

AT THE ROTUNDA.

It was nearly 1 o'clock when the procession from the senate appeared at the doors of the rotunda. President Cleveland and President elect walked side by side, and took places in the small railed enclosure which stood in the centre in front of the stand. Such members of the senate, diplomatic corps and house representatives and a number of officers of the government as cared to brave the elements then came on in a body. When the crowd saw the president, there arose a tremendous uproar. The cheering was renewed again and it was not until President Harrison had several times raised his hand for order that silence was restored. When the cheering had partially subsided Chief Justice Fuller arose and baring his white locks to the rain, took the bible in his right hand ready to administer the oath of office. General Harrison and Sergeant at Arms Canaday also removed their hats. It was a most impressive scene. Standing with uncovered heads in the midst of the pelting rainstorm the chief justice and president elect, surrounded by high officers of state and in the presence of an immense multitude of citizens, faced each other with bowed heads while the former read the oath of office in a low tone of voice. At the conclusion of the reading the president, with his right hand clasping the holy bible, bowed his head in assent. Silence marked this proceeding, and with it ended there was another tremendous burst of applause.

The cheering which followed the ceremony having at last subsided somewhat, President drew from his pocket a roll of manuscript and after adjusting his spectacles, began reading the inaugural address. He kept his silk hat on during the delivering part of the address, but becoming tired toward the close, seated himself. The president spoke in a loud clear tone, with distinct enunciation, and emphasized with much earnestness portions of his speech. It was an instance of the president's power to raise above the surroundings and become wholly indifferent to them. His manner was as deliberate and forceful as if he were in the senate chamber. Perfectly at ease, his gestures were emphatic and prominent and all the graces of oratory, of which he is a master, were brought into play effectively.

Vice President Morton and Mrs. Morton were present during part of the ceremony, but the latter fainted in the throng and was removed to the vice president's rooms in the senate, where she quickly revived and was taken home. The delivery of the speech was frequently marked by loud applause and shouts of approval. The reference to Dakota produced considerable cheering, but when the president spoke of a free ballot the applause was mighty and tremulous. There were only mild demonstrations of approval when the president spoke of his policy in regard to office, and when he mentioned the words "civil service" there was a silence broken only by a prolonged "Oh" from a solitary voice in the crowd. The reference to the rehabilitation of the navy and to the establishment of steamship lines evoked cheers and cries of "Good," but the most overwhelming shouts of approval was reserved for the statement of the president's pension policy. The crowd cheered again and again at this point and waved their hands and canes wildly. At the close of the address there was another outburst of applause, during which the president turned around and kissed his wife and daughters. The crowd, which had all this time surged back and forth like waves of the sea, gradually dissolved. The line was formed, and the president retraced his steps to the vice president's room of the senate, escorted by Senator Hoar.
