THE CABINET.

President Harrison Relieves the Anxiety of the Country by Announcing His Cabinet.

Prompt Action of the Senate in Confirming the Nominations.

WASHINGTON, March 5.—Long before noon every seat and standing place in the galleries of the senate was filled, and the stairs and corridors were packed with people. After reading of the journal, Edmunds reported that the committee which was appointed to wait on the president of the United States and inform him of the meeting of the senate in executive session, had performed that duty and had been informed by the president that he would, early today, communicate with the senate in writing. Cockrell offered a resolution (which was laid over) for the appointment of a committee of five senators on the methods of business in the executive departments and causes of delay in the transaction of business.

Stewart offered a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the senate that the business interests of the country require the purchase by the secretary of the treasury of $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month for coinage. Laid over.

Blair presented the credentials of Mr. Marston, appointed by the governor of New Hampshire to fill the vacancy caused by termination of Chandler's term and the failure of the legislature to elect a senator. The credentials were read and Marston took the oath.

President Harrison sent to the senate the following nominations:

- Secretary of State—James G. Blaine of Maine.
 - Secretary of the treasury—Wm. Windom of Minnesota.
 - Secretary of war—Redfield Proctor of Vermont.
 - Secretary of the navy—Benjamin A. Tracey of New York.
 - Secretary of the interior—John W. Noble of Missouri.
 - Postmaster general—John Wanamaker of Pennsylvania.
 - Attorney general—W. H. H. Miller of Indiana.
 - Secretary of agriculture—Jeremiah Rusk of Wisconsin.
- On motion of Hale the senate proceeded to consider with closed doors. The senate promptly confirmed them all and adjourned at 12:45 p. m.

Queen Elizabeth's Portrait.

In person Elizabeth was a little over middle height, and when she came to the throne she must have been a beautiful young woman, with a profusion of auburn hair, a broad, commanding brow, and regular features that were capable of rapid changes of expression, as her hazel eyes flashed with anger or sparkled with merriment. Her portraits appear to have been all more or less "idealized"; their number is so great that it is to be wondered that no monograph has yet been attempted dealing with them at all adequately. By far the most impressive picture of her which has been engraved is Mark Gerard's portrait at Burleigh House; it forms the frontispiece to the first volume of Wright's "Elizabeth and Her Times." The daughter of Henry VIII and Annie Boleyn could hardly have missed inheriting some of the personal beauty of her parents, but she was emphatically her father's child. From him she got her immense physical vigor, her magnificent constitution, her powerful intellect, a frame which seemed incapable of fatigue, and a nervous system that rendered her almost insensible to fear or pain. Her life was the life of a man, not of a woman; she could hunt all day, dance or watch masques and pageants all night, till the knees of strong men trembled under them as they vainly waited in attendance upon her parity; yet she never seemed to suffer from the immense tension at which she lived. With her amazing energy, her want of all sympathy for weakness, her fierce willfulness and self assertion, and a certain coarseness of fiber, it was inevitable that she should be unfeminine.—Dictionary of National Biography.

THE SWALLOW.

O, to feel the wild thrill of the swallow,
The wander of the wind!
On the soft blue billows of air to follow
The summer, to soar and sing!
To drink blue air and to feel it flowing
Through every dainty plume,
Uplifting, pillowing, bearing, blowing,
And the earth below in bloom!
"Is it far to heaven, O swallow, swallow!"
The heavy hearted sings:
"For I watch your flight, and long to follow,
The while I wait for wings."
—Anna Brynston Averill.

Kate Castleton at Home.

One would not think it probable, after witnessing pretty Kate Castleton dance about the stage, kick up her heels and smile in such a saucy way, that her pet hobby is to arise in the morning at her charming home, Castleton manor, near Oakland, Cal., cook the breakfast, and then tramp all over the place. But she does. After breakfast she takes a peep in the stables to see that her horses are being properly fed and cared for, meanders around to the henry to feed the poultry, then to the garden to water the flowers, and last, but not least, to the kennels, where she has the finest selection of dogs on the Pacific coast. In fact, there are very few kennels in the world that can equal it, every one of the dogs being a prize winner.

She frequently spends hours in their company, and it really seems as though they expected her visits as a part of their daily routine. Big Ned, the dog for whom she would not take a fortune, once saved her life. She was taking her morning canter one summer two years ago, and was about to alight from the horse, when her dress caught in the saddle. The horse became frightened, gave a sudden start and dragged the fair actress along the ground. Big Ned jumped to the rescue, seized the bridle rein and held the animal still until she was rescued from her perilous position. Nothing is too good for Ned. Miss Castleton is also a great lover of old bric-a-brac, and her summer home is filled with rare and costly specimens.—Chicago Herald.

The Snake's Charm.

A gentleman from Iowa says that one day while going through his poultry yard he noticed a turkey hen with neck stretched to the utmost, eyes distended and wings slightly raised, gazing most intently upon some object on the ground three or four feet from where it stood. Watching it for some moments, he found that the turkey moved slowly around the attracting object in a circle without withdrawing its gaze for a moment. After it had made a full circle he approached to learn the cause of its extraordinary behavior and found that the attracting object was a small striped snake partially concealed by some small weeds, and not until he touched it did the turkey notice his presence, though ordinarily it would not permit him to approach within two or three yards. Even when driven away the turkey persisted in returning and working around in a circle. Other fowls were then driven in the direction of the snake, and all on catching a glimpse of it were strangely affected. Finally, satisfied that the condition of the fowls on seeing the reptile was purely an objective one, the writer took a stick and approached the snake to kill it. It was dead already—and most noteworthy point of all—its head was crushed out of all semblance to its original shape and covered with dirt.

The conclusion the writer reached was that small animals passed into a subjective or hypnotic condition on being suddenly brought in view of serpents, of which all animals, great and small, appear to stand in dread. Accepting this, he says, we have the fascination of birds and small beasts by snakes as a scientific fact.—Popular Science Monthly.

That settles it.

I met the Hon. Fernando Jones yesterday and, among other things, he asked me if I had read the recent discussion about the headwaters of the Mississippi. "It revived an old story in my mind," he said. "Henry R. Schoolcraft, a celebrated traveler and writer, in his account of it said the lake was called Itasca, after two Latin words signifying true head. I puzzled myself over this a good deal and asked him one day how he made it. He replied: 'Quite easily. Veritas means true and caput head. Striking off the first syllable of the first word and the last syllable of the other one you have Itasca—ver-itas ca-pu-t. It is equal,' said Mr. Jones, 'to Lorenzo Dow's celebrated text against the fashion of high head dresses: 'Let him who is on the house top not come down.'—Chicago
