Husband and Wife.

Among other absurdities we have well meaning husbands and wives harassing one another to death for no reason in the world but the desire of conforming to current notions regarding the proper conduct of married people. These victims are expected to go about perpetually together, as if they were a pair of carriage horses; to be forever holding claims over one another, exacting or making useless sacrifices, and generally getting in one another's way. The man who marries finds that his liberty has gone, and the woman exchanges one set of restrictions for another. She thinks herself neglected if the husband does not always return to her in the evenings, and the husband and society think her unattractive, frivolous, and so forth, if she does not stay at home alone trying to sigh him back again.

The luckless man finds his wife so very dutiful and domesticated, and so very much confined to her "proper sphere," that she is, perchance, more exemplary than entertaining. Still, she may look injured and resigned, but she must not seek society and occupation on her own account, adding to the common mental store, bringing new interest and becominging thus a contented, cultivated and agreeable being. No wonder that, while all this is forbidden, we have so many unhappy wives and bored husbands. The more admirable the wives the more profoundly bored the husbands.—Herald of Health.

The Mysterious Wrestler.

In Mr. A. C. Gunter's new book, "That Frenchman," the scene opens in Paris during the last years of the second empire, changes to St. Petersburg and then to the German-Russian frontier. The tale is melodramatic in character, as are Mr. Gunter's other books, but the author states that he has tried to develop more comedy. The advance orders he reports at 40,000. He has introduced as one of his characters "the wrestler in the mask," a man who produced a great sensation in Paris in 1867 and '68. This person was supposed to be some great nobleman who was fond of wrestling. He was in the habit of driving to the scene wrapped in a long cloak, under which he wore his wrestling dress. On his face he had a small, black silk mask. He met all comers and was never defeated. Naturally he was the source of gossip, and the halls or circus was crowded when it was announced that he was to appear.—Current Literature.

Her Moral Character.

Some amusing incidents happen at the civil service examinations which the laws now require to be passed by candidates for official positions and clerkships. It was at an examination here in Boston that a young woman found herself confronted with the question:

"Are you of good moral character?"

She was very much amused at the question and in doubt how to treat it. Calling the examiner to her desk she said about the question:

"I have the reputation of being of good moral character. But you know 'reputation' is what people think of us, while 'character' is what God and the angels know of us, and that I don't want to tell."

The examiner said she need not worry.—Albany Express.

We Want Self Defense.

A New Yorker old enough to know better is reported in The Tribune as having uttered these terribly treasonable protests against some modern improvements:

What with your murderous railroads, your new fangled bridges, your ten story buildings and electric currents over and under and on all sides of you, your life isn't worth a penny at any time or anywhere. If you walk in the middle of the street, the pavement is just as likely as not to shoot up into the air and blow you out of sight. Talk about coast defenses and harbor defenses, what we want is self defense.—Boston Transcript.

SAFEGUARDS OF THE WILL.

Wills After Points to the Means of Defeating It from Last Paragraph.

Every man and woman of thinking mind is occupied when Felix Adler rose to deliver his lecture on "The Struggle against Temptation." The audience listened to Mr. Adler with rapt attention and at the conclusion of the address applauded loudly.

After the usual singing by the choir Mr. Adler said that human desire was at the bottom of nearly all the good and evil in the world; the desire for knowledge fostered the pursuit of science, the desire for the beautiful had created the art and virtue would be unknown if there was not within man a groping for good harmony.

"There are also within us," he continued, "certain gross appetites and passions, and when these occupy the hold of the mind they crowd out the better thoughts and drown the soft, sweet voice of virtue. The voice of duty has been called still and small, and to hear it we must have the faculty of stilling our passions."

"Certain natural desires are best dealt with by satisfying them, particularly in children, whose appetites are only sharpened for pleasure when it is denied them. Many children, denied what is perfectly legitimate in youth, particularly the sons of clergymen, go to excesses the moment they gain their liberty."

"It is the normal rule to weaken desires by satisfying them, but there are certain desires which we cannot and others which we must not gratify. No desire is justified because it is natural, if it interferes with higher considerations; and all desire must be suppressed when it does interfere with these considerations. The object of desire has power over us in proportion as the mental image is sharply defined. Consequently, when such desires do impress themselves upon our mind, we must at once turn our thoughts in another direction."

"Human will is free, let doubters say the contrary, notwithstanding. This theory to the contrary is the outcome of obscure metaphysics. We must, nevertheless, understand the limits in which we are free. Let no man believe that he can harbor evil thoughts without being the worse for it. We are, however, free to throw off these thoughts when they enter, and in making this effort lies our redemption. This throwing off must be complete and immediate, else it only leads to renewed moral degradation. We must force our thoughts into a new channel when evil ones assail us, but by forbidding them we only make the desire more intense. Jesus illustrates this when he says 'Get thee behind me, Satan.'"

"By some it is argued that this system is cowardly and that we should boldly face evil. It is true that we ought to be able to face it; but it is also true that we are unable to do so successfully. You hear of the great social sin, the moral filth of which is spread over our city. How can men who have mothers and sisters forget the sanctity of women and profit by this sin? It is desire that curses them and makes their vision narrow, and they apologize for themselves by saying that the desire is natural. Weaklings all, ever ready to appeal to nature. Let each man have a task for himself throughout life, and like Ulysses he will sail past the sirens toward the shining goal."

"The two great helps toward this end are the society of good and true men, and particularly that of cultivated and refined women, and the ideal companionship of those loved ones who have passed away."

"In the first we find those things which we have been striving for taken for granted, and in the second we can do nothing wrong in the radiant beauty of those sweet faces which have gone to the life of infinite peace."—New York Herald.

Time Is Money.

Time well employed produces money or an equivalent gain of some kind. Time idled away or wasted away upon some unnecessary or useless labors not only yields no return, but represents a loss of opportunity that cannot be replaced. One may regain any other thing that is squandered save time. Once gone, it is gone for all eternity. No more important lesson can be given to the young than that on the value of time. It may be passed by unheeded, for on this subject more than any other men seem determined to learn by experience; but warnings should nevertheless be given, that there may be as early an awakening as may be to the irreparable loss of wasted time.

Even the best of men arrived at middle age are sure to have regrets for lost opportunities, for wasted time. Looking back with the knowledge gained by experience, they can see how much better they might have ordered their lives if they had made the best possible use of their time. Such knowledge cannot be expected in younger men. The time will come when they, too, will look back with regret; but they should be given early warning from the experience of others, and be taught as well as may be that time is money, not in the vulgar sense, but in that higher one which represents money as merely a symbol of things that are good to have.—Baltimore Sun.

A Postal Card Well Filled.

When some antiquarian of the future reports that a citizen of Belfast wrote on a postal card the whole of one of the annual messages of President Cleveland the inference will be that President Cleveland was a man of few words, but the inference will be wrong. The message contained 15,000 words, yet Mr. Rila Kittredge got it all on the card with a steel pen and ink, each letter, as seen through a microscope, being beautifully formed. Moreover, a border three-eighths of an inch wide is placed around the card, representing a string of beads, fifty-two in number, each three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, and most of them containing the Lord's prayer; 4,000 words are put into this border. Mr. Kittredge is 77 years old, and says he could get 18,000 words on a postal card. It took him forty-five days to write this one.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Singular Cases of Intoxication.

A prominent military man, who had drunk moderately during the war and had abstained from that time on, while attending a dinner with his old comrades, where most of them were intoxicated, suddenly became bilious, made a foolish speech, and settled back in his chair in a drunken state, and was finally taken home quite stupid.

He had not drunk any spirits and had only used coffee and water and yet he had all the symptoms of the others, only his was intoxication from contagion—the favoring soil had been prepared long ago in the army.

Another case was that of a man who had been an inebriate years ago, but had reformed, says The Popular Science Monthly. He was recently elected to office and gave a dinner to some friends. Among them was a physician who has been greatly interested in these studies. He sent me a long report, the substance of which was this:

On the occasion referred to many of the company became partially intoxicated, and the host, who drank nothing but water, became bilious and finally stupid with them. He was put to bed with every sign of intoxication, but recovered, and next morning had only a confused notion of these events.

The third case occurred four years ago. A reformed man, of twelve years' sobriety, went on a military excursion with a drinking company, and, although he drank nothing but lemonade, became as much intoxicated as the others.

This event was the subject of much comment and loss to him, socially and otherwise, although he protested, and others confirmed his statements, that he did not take any spirits at this time.—New York Journal.

A Perfect Smoke Consumer.

I have just returned from Springfield, Mo., where, in the shops of the St. Louis and San Francisco road, I saw a furnace in operation that at once solved the problem of smoke consumption and the reduction of coal consumption to the minimum. It is bound to revolutionize the entire system of steam making. It is the invention of Carney, the master mechanic of the road, has been in operation for nearly a year, and is a complete success. To put it briefly, by Carney's process the highest degree of heat is secured by burning with every pound of coal two pounds of water. In fact, water gas is made, and I wonder that no one ever thought of it before. The slack coal is mixed with water in the proportion of one part to two, and the result is the formation of the gas. Every part of the coal is consumed.

At the end of twenty-four hours there were but three wheelbarrows full of fine ashes carried away. Had the furnace been fed dry there would have been from eighteen to twenty barrowfuls of ashes and cinders. There was actually no smoke escaping from the smoke stack, which was but twelve feet high. I was struck by the shortness of the stack, and remarked it to the engineer, who replied: "Why have it any higher? Nothing goes through it." At my request the water was cut off, and the furnace was fed dry for two hours, with the result that the furnace was unable to make sufficient steam to run the machinery in the shop. This water burning furnace is to my mind the greatest invention of the past twenty-five years.—Boiler Maker in Globe-Democrat.

A Card in the Pocket.

Several young married ladies in a certain private boarding house in St. Paul are just now having oceans of fun at the expense of one of their sex in Rochester, N. Y. The husband of one of the ladies recently purchased a spring overcoat. With true womanly instinct his better half, the first time the coat was left at home, proceeded to explore the various pockets, and hidden in the little side pocket she found a card on which the name and address of a young lady at Rochester, N. Y., was written. Of course the husband was asked to explain, but could not, as he had not been aware of the presence of the card. The idea that it had been placed there by a young tailor who had handled the coat last at the factory struck the spouse in a forcible manner.

His wife was loath to believe such a story, but followed the advice of her husband and wrote to the address given, pretending that she was a young man who had bought the coat. In the meantime she told the other ladies at the house of the affair and all waited impatiently for an answer. It came, and of course it was as the husband suspected. The writer was willing to continue the correspondence if the gentleman was sincere, etc. Another letter is now being written. I wonder how the girl will feel when she discovers that her address fell into the hands of a female instead of some gay deceiver?—St. Paul Pioneer Press.
