PROTECTIVE vs REVENUE TARIFFS
As Mr. McKinley pointed out in his recent speech in Sandusky, a revenue tariff puts duties on articles not produced at home, while a protective tariff puts duties on articles competing with home products. This, broadly stated, is the real difference between the two systems. Both free traders and protectionists are agreed that the bulk of the honey for the government's support must be obtained at the custom house. Each, that is to say, prefers the indirect to the direct form of taxation, but the free traders contend that this indirect taxation should be levied on such articles and in such a way that it could afford no aid to the development of any home industry. The protectionists, on the other hand, demand that the tax be put on things which come into competition with articles grown, mined or made here, and thus help in the broadening and cheapening of home production. The free trader would have duties on tea, coffee and sugar, which can not be produced here at all, or which can not be grown in quantities approaching the home demand. Woolen and cotton goods, iron and steel manufactures, and other articles which are produced here, or which may, by a reasonable amount of protection, be produced here, are the things which, when imported, the protectionists compel to pay tribute.

The average reasonable being, when he thinks over the matter carefully, will be convinced that the protectionist system is wiser and better than the other. Under this plan the things which we can not grow or make come to us cheaper than the free trader would furnish

The tendency of prices in these articles, moreover, is steadily downward, because of the development of the home industry which these barriers provide. Protective duties, in fact, render us a double benefit in the long run. They not only give work to large numbers of our people who could not find such lucrative employment otherwise, but, owing to the increased competition, they cut down the prices of the protected commodities to a lower figure than could be touched if we adhered to a course which would have left us dependent on the outside world for these things. The record of the steel rail and other metal industries, is absolutely conclusive on this point. The protective duties are not permanent. They are imposed for the purpose of giving the industries affected a start, and as these industries gain in extent and strength the duties are lowered. In the meantime the prices of these goods are reduced in a larger ratio than the cut in the duties, and the consumers as well as the producers are benefitted.—Globe-Democrat.

The steamship Majestic, of the White Star line, has just completed a trip from Queenstown to Sandy Hook in five days, eighteen hours and eight minutes, which makes it the champion ocean greyhound, beating all previous records ever made by fifty-eight minutes, in crossing the Atlantic. Where it will lead to, in the possibilities of ocean navigation, no one can accurately foretell. But so long as prevailing general principles in marine building remain, it would seem that at best, further improvements in the speed qualities of steamships will be limited to corrections of trifling faults that do not materially affect the results desired.

The City of Paris and the City of New York, of the Inman Line, and the Teutonic and Majestic, of the White Star Line, now stand at the head of the list of ocean racers. Last season the racing between the City of New York and the Teutonic was the feature of ocean travel, and these four steamers seem to be equally keen in their rivalry this year to stand at the head of all competitors. But with all this intense competition, it is noticeable that the strife is about a matter of two hours' time in a journey of nearly six days.

The largest tin plates in the world are now made at Apollo, Penn. They are 20x100 inches and intended for roofing. It is confidently predicted that American ingenuity and enterprise will soon produce tin in continuous sheets like the paper intended for the modern newspaper presses and they will be put up in big rolls for roofing purposes.—Lincoln Journal.

GOLD has stopped moving outward, and the indications are that the return current will now soon set in. In the past seven months there was $75,000,000 of the yellow metal shipped to the old country, but now for the next six or eight months gold will come back in large quantities to pay the farmers all over this great country of ours for their grain of all kinds.

A CINCINNATI correspondent who saw Governor Hill the other day says that what impressed him most about the governor was his almost perfect physical form. He might have added that Grover Cleveland and Brer Gorman were also "corn-fed" and in good muscle.

If George Francis Train makes good connections and gets on the steamer Majestic he will put a girldie about the earth in forty days, as he boasted he would do before he started.
