"Dan'l Boone."

Messrs. Peck & Fursman, who have had a long and very extensive experience as theatrical managers, and who possess a liberal allowance of brains, energy and means regard the American people as possessed of a critical and discriminating judgment in the matter of amusements. In this belief they happily hit upon the idea of giving the public a play that should be thoroughly and distinctively American. How well the idea was received is told by the great success of "Dan'l Boone" the past four seasons. Believing that the trials, dangers and privations of the pioneers of this country would furnish good material for such a drama, the life of Dan'l Boone was selected as being the most prolific with incidents from which a good drama could be written. The selection was a wise one. His personality stamped him as one of Nature's noblemen. Incapable of fear, a bold and original character, in times of danger cool and daring, and in times of peace gentle as a child; his life teemed with dramatic incidents, which have been introduced in the now famous play which bears his name. The play depicts faithfully and in a fascinating manner the life of Boone and his companions, from the time they first settled in Kentucky. Showing their happy home there; the uprising of the Indians; the burning of Boone's cabin and the capture of his two daughters. Then follows in dramatic succession the Indians' incampment; the attempt of a rescue and capture of Boone; his famous denunciation of Simon Girty; the preparation of the Indians for his torture; his unexpected rescue by his faithful horse, and his subsequent thrilling knife fight with the Indian chief, for his child's life, ending in his victory and the extermination of the Indians by the settlers. Don't fail to see it at the Waterman to-morrow night. Don't miss the street parade.

Several flocks of wild geese were observed flying in a southerly direction last evening.

Everybody should contribute toward the expense incurred in equipping the advertising train.

The law prohibiting the shooting of quails expires to-morrow. Sports are permitted to shoot these birds from Oct. 1st to Jan. 1.

Work on the court house is progressing nicely. It will be finished in ample time for the incoming republican county officials.

The real estate men, particularly, are interested in the advertising train. They should avail themselves of an opportunity to assist in the enterprise by contributing generously of finance when the solicitors approach them.

Rogers not Guilty.

In the case of Neff vs. Rogers a decision was rendered acquitting defendant. The friends of Mr. Rogers are doubtless glad to learn that he is innocent of the charge of theft. It is hoped that Mr. Rogers' exposure of the condition of the city jail will lead to an investigation by the authorities and the place made decent, at any rate.

An Interesting Letter.

EDITOR HERALD:—I promised you a letter describing the oil fields and other interesting sights to be seen in the east, and shall endeavor to comply.

We left Falls Creek, enroute for Niagara Falls, via the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg R. R., which crosses the mountains via the Bradford oil-districts, reaching the highest point of the Alleghany range at Mt. Jewett. The first stop of any importance is Johnsonburg. Here the visitor finds natural gas wells by the score; also, one of the largest paper mills in the world. Johnsonburg, on the whole, is one of the best business points in Pennsylvania. Our next stop is at King's bridge. This is the largest trestle bridge in the world. The length is almost 4000 feet and the height is 300 feet. A look at this bridge is well worth a week's travel alone. The tops of the trees tower 158 feet above the barge, and to stand on the bridge and look down, ward to their tops, presents a sight wonderful to behold. The train made a stop on the center of the bridge and the passengers were permitted to take a view of the bridge, mountains and valleys. We then started on our journey again, well pleased. Long before we reached Bradford, oil wells became numerous; the mountains were covered with them, even to the highest peaks. There are now 14,703 wells in operation in this district. The majority of these were once flowing wells, but pumping is now necessary in most of them. Natural gas is abundant. The yield of oil from each well is from two to fifty barrels a day, and is sold for about sixty cents a barrel. One of the most beautiful sights we witnessed was a large oil well tank put on fire. We passed through the state of New York, and my first impressions of that country were certainly not very flattering. It is without exception the poorest country I ever saw—no crops to speak of, not much fruit, and the cows are about as large as a Nebraska goat. They have a few fine horses. From Buffalo to Niagara we pass through a very beautiful country, but as to its productiveness I cannot vouch. By the way, Buffalo is a magnificent city, located on the east end of Lake Erie; it is the home of that man of destiny, Grover Cleveland. Arriving at the falls we spent a day visiting the cataract and other places of interest. We visited Luna Island, Goat's Island, the Great Whirlpool, Cave of the Winds, Rock of Ages, and took a trip on the "Maid of the Mist" to the foot of the Great Horseshoe Falls. Here you first realize the majesty and power of nature's greatest wonder. We next crossed the great suspension bridge to the queen's dominions and went up to the park on the Canadian side. Here you get a better view of the falls. The suspension bridge is a wonderful piece of work. Its length is 1,208 feet; length of cables, 1,840 feet; height of bridge from river to roadway, 190 feet; height of tower, 160 feet, above the bridge. In obedience to a request from Prof. Halsey, we find that the falls have receded 137 feet from 1845 to 1871, and that only one-seventeenth of the water passes over the American Falls, one-fiftieth over the Centre Falls and the balance over the Canadian side, or the Horseshoe Falls. Only about one-fourth of the Horseshoe Falls belong to the queen. I got a few specimens of rock out of the Cave of Winds, under the American Falls, but my advice to travellers is to stay out of this part of the falls unless they are very plucky; indeed, it is enough to scare a Cass county democrat out of politics. We next visited Toronto, Staplehurst and Rochester, but will give a description of these points some time in the near future.

Mr. Ed Parrott, at his own request, has been relieved of his duties as car checker and mail man for the B. & M. at this place. It is with regret that we chronicle the above, as it is highly probable that Mr. Parrott will locate elsewhere. During the time that he has been located here he has won the confidence and esteem of the B. & M. officials and made friends with those with whom he came in contact, all of whom will regret his departure. In whatever place Mr. Parrott may locate he heartily merits the good will and esteem of the people.

Always take your prescriptions to Brown & Barrett's.
