the countries concerned know precisely how the situation stands. The president's action in this emergency is dictated by considerations of sound public policy as well as demanded by the law. A failure to resort to it would give offense to the nations which have met the conditions of the law and render them restive under the arrangement. They would not be able to see the justice or the fairness of requiring concessions from them which were not extorted from their competitors. niece since her marriage with the senior member of Bush, Merrill & Co. When at last the cab had rumbled up to the front door and her aunt had piloted Janet to her room, where the outer coating of soot and grime attendant on the long railroad journey was duly removed from that young lady's fair exterior, Mrs. Bush felt that nor Boies, of Iowa, offers to furnish the responsibilities connected with her position of hostess had been accomplished and, throwing her arms about Janet's neck, her overburdened heart Home Magazine found expression in a torrent of hysterical sobs. "Dear, dear auntie, what is the matter?" exclaimed the surprised girl, meanwhile drawing Mrs. Bush down upon the lounge beside her and placing a protecting and comforting arm about the weeping matron's waist.

And then Mrs. Bush told her all. "She will be beautiful, Janet!" exclaimed Mrs. Bush. "The other was pretty, but not pretty enough; so she was discharged. There will be no mistake made this time-the new one will be beautiful, I tell you!"

"But then," remonstrated the girl, 'Uucle John may bever give her a thought outside of a business way."

"Outside of a business way!" repeated her aunt; "that's just it! Every-thing he does will be dictated purely by the requirements of his business. He can flirt with her all day long in his private office, and still it will be set down to a pressure of correspondence. Oh. I'd give almost anything if I could watch him just for one day and see what really goes on in that inner office when the door is closed!"

"You can!" said Janet after a mo-ment's silence, during which a brilliant scheme had been gradually formulating in her active brain. "Am I pretty enough for a typewriter, auntie?" "What do you mean, Janet?" said her aunt, staring in blank amazement. "I mean auntie," said the girl, as she rose to her feet and began putting on her jaunty little traveling hat,

"that I intend to apply for the position of typewriter to the firm of Bush, Merrill & Co."

"Never, Janet! I will not let you!" "But you cannot help yourself, auntie, dear," said Janet, with a decided little toss of her pretty head. "I am going to do it! You will never be happy until you know the truth in some way. Uncle John will not know me, as he has never seen me, and if he hires me I can tell you faithfully what goes on in that inner office.

"The only question is whether I can get the position or not."

"No fear of that," said Mrs. Bush, with a little shrug of her shoulders as her eyes rested on the exquisitely proportioned figure and the aristocratic face of her niece. "You'll be hired fast enough. But can you run the typewriter, Janet?"

"I ought to be able to," answered Janet with a smile of assurance, "since I've done all father's amanuensis work with it for the last six years. I'm an expert, auntie!"
