A Fatal Mistake.
Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Fricke & Co., who guarantee and recommend Dr. Miles' unequalled new Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. These show a weak, nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and a fine book, containing many marvelous cures, free at F. G. Ely's Cream Balm is especially adapted as a remedy for catarrh which is aggravated by alkaline dust and dry winds.—W. A. Hover, Druggist, Denver.

"What, dear—a flirt?" suggested Mrs. Bush.

"No," snapped Janet; "but an ogre!" And then she gave her aunt a detailed account of the events of the day, and in ending said:

"And to think that at the very moment you supposed him carrying on with me, he was preparing a delightful surprise for you, aunt!"

"A delightful surprise? What is it, Janet?"

"He's going to give you a beautiful birthday present—an elegant couple-lined thoroughbred in russ velvet and a pair of Kentucky thoroughbreds, with their tails cut just a little, auntie. I know, because I wrote both letters myself. That's the kind of a faithless husband you've got!"

Late that night, when her husband returned home Mrs. Bush, contrary to her usual custom, met him at the door with a beaming face.

"I'm so glad you've come, dear!" she said, as she kissed him affectionately. "Janet is here. Come into the parlor. I want to introduce you."

Mrs. Bush led her husband into the brilliantly lighted reception-room, where Janet, attired in a clinging evening costume of soft null, stood waiting in trembling expectancy. Both Mrs. Bush and Janet had looked for a quick start of surprise from the merchant when his eyes should first meet the figure of his grandson type-writer in that of his wife's niece. What was their surprise, then, when the gentleman advanced toward Janet and said, in the most cordially unaffected manner:

"As I told you this morning, my dear work is work. But after hours even an old fellow like myself may be permitted to enjoy himself, and bending over he pressed a courtly kiss upon Janet's cheek.

"What, you know, John?" exclaimed Mrs. Bush in consternation.

"Yes, I know, Mrs. Bush," said her husband, with a heavy laugh. "You really couldn't expect me to do, you know, when I've had her picture in your album for the last six months? I look at whenever I wanted to. One doesn't forget a face like yours, Mrs. Wells, even though he knows he is expected to. But to what, if I may ask, was I indebted for my pleasant companion to-day?"

"Oh, it was only a little joke that Janet and I hatched up this morning, John," said Mrs. Bush hurriedly, while Janet blushed scarlet.

"I thought as much," said the merchant, nodding his head, as if the lame explanation was an entirely satisfactory and conclusive one. He was a keen enough man of the world to have an idea or two of his own upon the subject, which, however, as a dutiful husband and uncle, he kept to himself.

"And now, sir," said his wife playfully, taking him by the lapels of his coat and shaking him; "now, sir, what have you to say about a certain coupe, lined throughout in russ velvet, and two Kentucky thoroughbreds, with their tails cut just a little? Come, sir, what have you to say to that?"

"Well," said Mr. Bush, with the merriest twinkle of all in his blue eyes, "as you and Janet seem to relish a joke so much I thought I would indulge in one myself. And that was my little joke, Mrs. —" H. G. Humphreys in Boston Globe.

Upper Crust Girls.

One of the greatest social puzzles to European strangers in San Francisco is to classify our women by their looks and dress. The average globe trotter falls utterly to distinguish the 400 from the 400,000.

A startling case of this inability of the European tourist was related the other night in a prominent club by a well visitor from across the herring pond, says the San Francisco Chronicle.

"Decently queer girls you have in San Francisco," said the loyal subject of Queen Victoria.

"Do you?"

"I was out in park this morning, you know, and I saw two deudely pretty and modest looking girls riding bicycles up a hill, you know, and they looked so jolly and innocent that I couldn't help remarking, 'Very hard work, ladies, and what do you think was the reply?'"

"What?"

"Yes, bloody hard work, cully, and d— poor pay."

"Do you think they were respectable girls?" asked the puzzled tourist.

"Oh, certainly. No doubt of it. Regular upper crust. In fact, the style that takes the whole bakery, as you might say, when they go out."

The observant globe trotter made a note of this incident and it will doubtless appear in due time in book form under the heading, "Eccentricities of the San Francisco Aristocracy."

The Greatest Building in the World.

An astonishing feature of the Columbian Exposition will be one of the palaces grouped in the heart of the fair grounds. It is the Manufactures Building, designed by Mr. George Post, of New York. It will bear the same relation to this exposition as the Eiffel Tower did to that of Paris in 1889; and, indeed, its possible use as a vantage-point from which to see the fair grounds has terminated in the negative the discussion for and against the construction in Chicago of a rival to the great tower of Paris. This greatest of all the exposition buildings, and of the buildings of the world, will present to Lake Michigan a facade of such a length as to suggest the wall of a city, yet it is so admirably designed, so light and graceful in its effect upon the vision, that its true extent can only be comprehended when its dimensions are expressed in figures and by comparisons. It is one-third of a mile long, and to compass it round about is to walk a mile. The roof of it is 1688 by 788 feet, and the span of the dome, the largest ever attempted, is 388 feet. The roof is 280 feet from the ground, and the building has 40 acres of ground-floor. Two of the vast machinery halls of the Paris Exposition could be wheeled through it, and the Auditorium, the building of which Chicago is most proud, could be pushed under this great roof, tower and all.—Julian Ralph, in Harper's Magazine.
