AMERICAN free traders attribute the downward tendency of wool prices in this country to the McKinley bill. English free traders attribute the fall in Australian wool to the same cause.—American Economist.

If the conflict with Chili should be in progress next June the democratic national convention in Chicago may declare it a failure and urge the government to surrender to the enemy, as the democratic convention held in the same town in 1864 did.

The dispatches report that the Indiana, Illinois and Connemaugh, three more of the large steamships of the International Navigation company, will be chartered by the United States government as soon as they touch an American port and sent to Boston to be fitted out as transports.

PROSPERITY IN PARALLEL. We are indebted to the Manufacturers' Record of Baltimore for the following deadly parallel directed at the calamities:

DECEMBER, 1890.	DECEMBER, 1891.
A great panic affecting the whole world.	The panic has passed.
Big banks and bankers failing.	Banks and bankers enthusiastic over the outlook.
Distrust everywhere.	Confidence everywhere.
Furnaces going out of blast.	Iron production and consumption steadily increasing.
No demand for steel rails.	Six hundred thousand tons of steel rails already ordered for 1892.
Smallest grain crops for many years.	Largest grain crops ever raised, exceeding the yield of 1890 by 1,500,000,000 bushels.
Railroads fighting for the little business offering.	Railroads taxed to their utmost to handle their business with an unprecedented demand for cars.
Exports of breadstuffs very small.	The heaviest grain exports ever known.
New failures every day.	New enterprises every day.
Stocks declining—dividends passed.	Stocks advancing—dividends declared and in many cases the rate increased.
Capitalists afraid to invest—no confidence in anything.	Capitalists seeking good investments.
The outlook for the immediate future dismal beyond description.	The outlook promising—a year of phenomenal activity and prosperity in 1892.

Now, we do not attribute all this prosperity to the advent of the McKinley tariff, however much it might delight the free trader to have us do so. We use the showing with quite a different purpose. It proves the utter groundlessness of the direful prophecies of woe and disaster made and repeated by the enemies of protection during the last two or three years. They said that the people would be ground down by excessive taxation, their substance absorbed by the iniquitous McKinley bill, and prosperity unknown if it became a law. To prove that the exact opposite of these conditions prevails is the use we make of the Record's comparison.—American Economist.

SENATOR PEPPER'S bill authorizing the secretary of the treasury to loan the farmers of Indiana $100,000,000 on real estate mortgages has been reported back from the committee on agriculture, with the recommendation that it be rejected on the ground that congress has no authority in the matter. This will save Mr. Pepper the trouble of introducing several other bills of the same character that he has in process of incubation.—Globe Democrat.

SPECIAL MARKET LETTER.

W. G. Press & Co., Bankers & Commission Merchants, Nos. 2 and 4 Sherman Street, Chicago, in their last special market letter say: The environments of the wheat market have undergone no material change during the past week, but there has been more than the usual interest manifested in the course of values which have fluctuated with rapidity accompanied with occasional exhibitions of excitement. As the true relations of supply to demand becomes better understood, the market finds friends in what is termed the investor class of traders, who buy moderately on all sharp declines when so called professionals are undecided as to what course to pursue. The absorbing of offerings by this class of dealers, who do not sell out every time the market shows signs of weakening, has contributed largely to the numerous reactions from the depressions occasioned by heavy short selling, and is of more real value as a sustaining influence than any other purely speculative factor. The situation abroad has encouraged the bear party to put out liberal lines of short wheat, for in endeavoring to provide for future necessities foreigners have succeeded in securing more than is requisite for immediate wants, and the surplus renders them for the moment somewhat independent. Their requirements for the remainder of the cereal year will be so great, however, that even a moderate decrease in the movement from exporting countries will soon deplete their stocks and compel a renewal of purchases in American markets. Beerbohm, a recognized English authority, estimates that the United States and Canada will have to be depended upon to furnish during the remainder of the season 144,000,000 bushels and expresses doubt as to their ability so to do. His doubts are shared by many observant dealers in America, who believe that the remaining exportable surplus is much less than the probable requirements. Our visible stocks have begun decreasing, and with even the present volume of exports, will rapidly diminish if receipts do not materially increase, of which there are at present no indications, notwithstanding the reports of a general improvement in country roads.

Farmers seem unwilling to accept current prices or have marketed a greater proportion of their grain than they have received credit for. So difficult has it become to obtain good milling wheat in some sections of the wheat territory, that many mills have ceased grinding, and No. 2 winter in our market is selling at May prices. The growing crop having been well protected by snow during the recent cold weather, sustained no new damage by freezing, but from the Pacific Coast come complaints of insufficient rainfall and retarded seeding, which is now five weeks late. The surplus remaining west of the Rocky Mountains is reported as small, and the western seaboard markets cannot much longer add, except in small quantities, to the on passage supplies.

The corn market exhibits none of the signs of animation which characterized it during November and December, and has quite generally been forsaken by speculators, for wheat and provisions. There is, however, an active business in the cash property for shipment to eastern and seaboard markets, the movement south of us being quite free. Producers are evidently unwilling to accept present prices, for more favorable weather for shelling and better roads for transportation to interior stations fails to materially increase receipts. The corn market has been the characteristic of the oat market, although there have been occasional spells of speculative activity. As in corn, the major portion of the business has been confined to purchases and sales for eastern shipment, the demand being excellent and the outward movement quite large. The fluctuations have been occasioned more by the sympathetic influence of wheat, than by any outside news of a bullish or bearish tenor.

Provisions have maintained their usual independence, being but slightly affected by the rise and fall of grain. There has for some time been a speculative element operating for an advance, which has succeeded in profitably working the market up from several sharp declines. The task has been rendered comparatively safe and easy because of the attitude of the packers, who, having large quantities of manufactured product in their houses, are not averse to an advance, and willingly afford support when it is most needed. Until they finally dispose of their property it will take unexpectedly large supplies of hogs to prevent a recovery from any serious breaks in the market.

La Grippe.

No healthy person need fear any dangerous consequences from an attack of la grippe if properly treated. It is much the same as a severe cold and requires precisely the same treatment. Remain quietly at home and take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as directed for a severe cold and a prompt and complete recovery is sure to follow. This remedy also counteracts any tendency of la grippe to result in pneumonia. Among the many thousands who have used it during the epidemics of the past two years we have yet to learn of a single case that has not recovered or that has resulted in pneumonia. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by F. G. Fricke & Co.

That Hacking Cough can so quickly be cured by Shiloh's cure. We guarantee it. For Sale by E. G. Fricke and O. H. Snyder

THE MILLIONAIRE'S HARD DAYS.

"Bonanza" Mackay Saw the Time When He Had Nothing to Eat.

When John W. Mackay worked as a poor placer miner he was always careful to put by enough, when he could, to put him in a position to seize an opportunity when it offered; or, saving that, to have something laid away for a rainy day. But prudence can't put virgin gold in the ground, and Mr. Mackay's claim on the Feather petered out. He worked at it for months, and as he might the color got fainter and fainter. He sat in his lonely cabin one rainy night, supperless, reading by his last tallow candle a work on mineralogy, which he had borrowed from a lordly and surprised engineer. Above the noise of the storm came a knock on the door. Andy Hepworth, keeper of the All Souls saloon at Thompson's Bar, staggered in. His stagger was caused by several things. One of them was a lot of his own whisky, which was under his skin; the others were two sides of bacon and a sack of flour, which weighted his shoulders and hands.

"John," he said, "you never spent a dollar over my bar or any other bar at the camp, and that shows your good sense. But the boys tell me you're in hard luck, and I know a man when I see one. Here's something to keep you going." And he threw on the rough floor the sack of flour and two sides of bacon. He retained the whisky.

"It was a good many years later, when Mackay had become a rich man, that he again met Hepworth, gone in health, crushed in spirit, lounging among the crowd of hopeless ones who hang like flies about the bugle-hole of the stock market, sugarless for them.

"Hullo, Andy!" cried John, delighted.

"You don't mean to say you remember me?" said the broken man.

"Remember you!" laughed the millionaire. "You bet I do, and that flour and bacon, too. Broke?"

"Flat."

"I'll carry you a hundred of Con. Virginia."

"Good enough, John. You've rescued me from hell. When shall I sell?"

"When I tell you."

But he wouldn't sell when he was told, and Mackay had to pay the loss. This happened three times.

Then the millionaire put his arm through Hepworth's and took him up to his office one day.

"Andy," he said, seriously, "has whisky got you, or can you let it alone?"

"Yes, I can."

"Honest Injun?"

"Straight."

"All right. There's no use trying to help you in stocks. You're a gambler, and when the fever gets hold of you you won't listen to me or anybody else. All Souls was a first-rate saloon, and you knew how to run it. That's your forte. I'll send Dick Dey out to find a good place, and you put yourself behind the bar. Come back in two days—3:30 p. m."

At the hour appointed Mr. Dey and Hepworth were there.

"Here," said Mr. Mackay, drawing a check. "There's $10,000. Andy. Dick struck an A1 place on Market street. You can buy it and have something left to stand a run of baracca, if need be. Keep the bottle for other folks and you'll be all right. If you don't—but I hope you will for your own sake. And don't you ever forget, Andy, that flour and bacon will always be a draft at sight for a grub stake."

I'm happy to say that new All Souls is a success, that Andy is as temperate as a parson, and that he's done the mainly thing and paid back every cent of the $10,000 out of less virtuous men's pockets. If you don't believe it, ask Dick Dey.—San Francisco News Letter.
