AN INTERVIEWER DAZED.

Senator Sanders, of Montana, Wanted to Know, You Know.

Most of the newspaper correspondents in Washington are of the opinion that Senator Sanders, of Montana, is an original somebody. One of the new men is deeply impressed with the Montana man's originality, says a writer in the Richmond Times. It seems that the recent arrival was desirous of interviewing the senator, and meeting him at the Capitol, notified him that he expected a talk on the irrigation of arid lands. New, Colonel Sanders is a very pleasant man to know when you know him, but it happened that the correspondent and he had never met before.

"So you want to interview me?" said the senator.

The would-be interviewer nodded.

"Would you have any objection to letting me know who you are?" queried the colonel.

"Here is my card."

"Thank you, but even that doesn't give me the information I am looking for. Where were you born? Who was your father and who was your mother? Did either of them ever do anything calculated to earn the applause of men? Did you receive all the benefits which are supposed to spring from a common school education, or was knowledge pumped into you from academic and collegiate sources? Are you bright mentally, and do you know how to transfer your impressions to paper? Have you accomplished anything that would fairly entitle you to a reasonable amount of renown?"

The interviewer was dazed.

"I ask you these things," continued the colonel, "because I am very much in earnest. Why should I be interviewed by a man of whose ability, or lack of ability, I know nothing? I might talk to you most entertainingly; might conversationally outshine historic chatters and promulgate ideas on which fortunes and nations might be upreared; but all this would avail me nothing if you were—excuse the term—a chump. I should appear like a fool. But if you are a brainy and keen witted and able to write, it would not make much difference what I said. I could be as dull and as prosy as a Senator—no, I won't mention his name—and you would be able to so sketch my conversation that the world would admire and say, 'What a statesman!'"

"It doesn't make much difference what the man who is being interviewed says; the main point is the interviewer. That's why I insist on knowing a newspaper man before I talk to him for publication."

tion might be costly.—Good housekeeping.

A Journey on the Volga.

Isabel F. Hapgood, the writer of the graphic paper, Count Tolstoi at Home, in the Atlantic, contributes to that magazine a paper called A Journey on the Volga. Of Kazan she says:

The Tatar quarter alone seemed to possess the requisite mystery and "local color." Here whole streets of tiny shops, ablaze with rainbow-hued leather goods, were presided over by taciturn, olive-skinned brothers of the Turks, who appeared almost handsome when seen thus in masses, with opportunities for comparison. Hitherto we had thought of the Tatars only as the old-clothes dealers, peddlers, horse-butchers and waiters of St. Petersburg and Moscow. Here the dignity of the prosperous merchants, gravely recommending their really well-dressed, well-sewed leather wares, bespoke our admiration.

The Tatar women, less easily seen, glided along the uneven pavements now and then, smoothly, but still in a manner to permit a glimpse of short, square feet, encased in boots flowered with gay hues upon a green or rose-colored ground, and reaching to the knee. They might have been hours of beauty, but it was difficult to classify them, veiled as they were, and screened as to head and shoulders by striped green kaftans of silk, whose long sleeves depended from the region of their ears, and whose collar rested on the brow. What we could discern was that their black eyes wandered like the eyes of unveiled women, and that they were coquettishly conscious of our glances, though we were of their own sex.

We found nothing especially striking among the churches, unless one might reckon the Tatar mosques in the list; and, casting a last glance at Sumbeka's curious and graceful tower, we hired a cabman to take us to the river, seven versts away.

We turned our backs upon Kazan without regret, in the fervid heat of that midsummer morning. We did not shake its dust from our feet. When dust is ankle-deep that is not very feasible. It rose in clouds, as we met the long lines of Tatar carter, transporting flour and other merchandise to and from the wharves across the "dam" which connects the town, in summer low water, with Mother Volga. In spring floods Matushka Volga threatens to wash away the very walls of the Kremlin, and our present path is under water.

Edison Has a Rival in Maine.

A man in Caribou, Aroostook county, Maine, claims that he has discovered an electrical power in the earth by the means of which he is able, using electrical instruments which have been invented by himself, to transmit sounds for any distance. This is done simply by connecting wires with the earth at different points and making use of the positive and negative electrical currents in the earth. If this system can be properly utilized and developed it will do away with the use of all batteries. The Caribou man has his system working over a distance of about a mile in successful operation. If all that is claimed for this new discovery is realized it will cause a revolution in electrical science, and powers heretofore unknown, and therefore useless, will do the work now done by costly machinery.

A DETERMINED CLIENT.

How She Raised Funds for Her Suit and Exhorted Her Lawyer.

"My first case," said a well-known Harlem lawyer to a N. Y. Commercial Advertiser man, "was a very unique one. An Irish family of the name of Murphy, living up on the rocks in one of the fast disappearing remnants of Shanty-town, were fraudulently evicted from their tumbledown cabin by a rascally landlord. The practical head of the household was the wife, and she determined to fight the matter out. For three weeks the Murphys, children, furniture and all, lived in the back yard of their former home with nothing between them and heaven but a flimsy tent made of old sheets, while Mrs. Murphy tramped around town looking for a lawyer who would take their case for nothing.

"One day she charged into my office and told me her story with the stereotyped exactness that comes from frequent repetition. The case seemed to be a worthy one, and as I wasn't overburdened with work I agreed to take it free of charge and reinstate the Murphys in their dilapidated homestead. She wanted to get out a free summons against the landlord and waive several other small but necessary expenses, but I told her it would be more politic to pay these, as the total would not amount to $5.

"Five dollars!" she cried; 'devil a cent have the Murphys seen since me husband losht his job wan month ago, and the lasht blissed thing thim pawn-brokers 'll take thee've got already.' When I offered to loan her the money she went into such a rage that I apologized abjectly. 'Be the powers!' she exclaimed, after pacing the floor for about ten minutes, 'I forgot wan thing! Wait, misther, an' I'll be back in an hour!'"

"She kept her word, and just as I was closing up shop for the day she reappeared with her hands full of silver, which she poured upon my desk. 'Mrs. Murphy,' I queried, 'where did you get this? I thought your last valuable had been pawned?' 'Yis,' she replied, with a gleam of triumph in the gray eye, 'Iv'inght exceipt the goat. I tuk aud Nanny, whose milk me childer has lived upon, over to the Kennesys, and they lint me $4.97 on her. There's the money, young man, and now, be the luv of hivar, go in and bate McCarty!'"

"I take pleasure in stating that McCarty was 'baten.'"

The Secret of His Success.

"Mind reading!" he said. "Why, it's the simplest thing in the world. I've followed it as a business now for five years, and I don't recall that I have made a failure."

"You can read any one's mind?" asked the caller.

"Well, no; not exactly that," replied the long-haired professor; "but I can make any one think that I can do it, and that's just as good from a business point of view."

"Make them think so?"

"Certainly. I wouldn't like to have my system generally known, but I don't mind giving you an insight into it. You see, I put a man in a low arm-chair so that he can't get up easily and then I make some passes before his eyes and fix his mind on some certain thing; it makes no difference what. Then I pass my hand back and forth slowly across his forehead and finally let it rest in one place for a moment or so."

"I don't see what good all that does."

"Of course not. Neither does he. So I swipe him."

"Hit him?"

"Slap his face and tell him to stop that. Then I hit him again and tell him that I won't stand that from any man."

"What's that for?"

"What's it for? Hang it, man! What would you be thinking if I were going through all that foolishness with you?"

"That you were a scoundrelly fraud, a confidence man, or an inspired idiot."

"Precisely. Same with my victim. That's why he's satisfied when he gets the second swipe that I have read his thoughts. It's no trick at all when you know how to do it."—Chicago Tribune.

Human Nature in a Street Car.

A Euclid avenue motor was the other day the scene of much mortification to a too hasty girl, considerable rage on the part of a peppery young man, and great amusement for everybody else. It was a crowded car and the youth was hanging on to a strap and standing just in front of the girl—toward whom was his back. Several men just in front of him and to his side pushed him in a very uncomfortable way back against the girl till the back of his leg rubbed against her knee. Then the car's motion enhanced the rubbing. The girl was disposed to take it as an insult, and as the rubbing became more pronounced she grew angrier. At length she determined upon action, and drawing out her hat pin prodded him in the leg. Just then the car gave a big lurch and the pin went way in.

"Wow!" yelled the young man. "What in h— and d—n." Then turning and seeing the girl, whose pretty face did not mollify him, "What do you mean by that, madam?"

"You were altogether too near me, sir," said the girl.

"Pshaw," said the injured one. "You might have been 80 years old for all I knew."

But perhaps the girl would not have cried if he hadn't added, just as the car stopped, "You're too fresh."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

All Questions Cheerfully Answered.

Housekeeper: "Have you any Mocha coffee?" Small dealer: "Yes, num."

"Genuine Mocha?" "Just imported, num."

"Import it yourself?" "Oh, yes, num. I send my orders direct to the sultan, num."

"Humph! How much have you on hand?" "About sixty pounds, num."

"You have, eh? Sixty pounds?" I read in the paper this morning that not over fifty pounds of a genuine Mocha reaches this country annually. "Yes, num, that's true, I had 'bout ten pounds left over last year."—A. Y. Weekly.

A Fatal Mistake.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Fricke & Co., Miles' unequalled new Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. The girl's industrial school building at Geneva is well along toward completion, and is said to be admirably arranged for its purpose.

A Mystery Explained.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak, nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and a fine book, containing many marvelous cures, free at F. G.
