PITILESS PARENTS.

CHILDREN MALTREATED BY CRUEL MOTHERS AND FATHERS.

Some Horrible Instruments of Torture. Cases of a Startling Nature Brought to Light by the Pennsylvania Society for the Protection of Children.

It hardly seems possible that a man with the figure of an athlete and the strength of a Samson would deliberately strike a child of six years full in the face with all the force of his brawny fist, and, as if to make it further deplorable, the poor, defenseless little creature, his own offspring. But such brutes exist, and this case is considered a mild one in the annals of pitiless deeds that come under the notice of the Pennsylvania Society for the Protection of Children from Cruelty.

At the society's new home Mr. Crew, the enthusiastic secretary and prime mover in all the good work done, in a conversation yesterday unfolded experiences such as would appear to belong to the times when torture was a recognized mode of punishment for old and young. Some of the cases would put to blush even the most cruel practices of those olden days, and yet they are occurring daily here in Philadelphia, and the victims one and all are children. To the parents who regard the treasures in their homes as the most priceless boon that heaven ever bestowed, and whose every thought is for the care and comfort of their little ones, this society peculiarly appeals.

How a mother's heart will bleed if through accident or design a little son or daughter must endure the pangs of suffering, and if punishment must be inflicted it falls more heavily on the parents than on the little offenders. Yet there are mothers, and fathers, too, who somehow seem to have been given the children, but the love that comes with the first weak cry has never found a place in their hearts. To them they are a burden, a constant source of annoyance, and only fit to slave and toil, and as their reward receive cuffs and kicks, scars and bruises.

A CHAMBER OF HORRORS.

In their new building the society has secured a long felt want. Supplied with every convenience and many comforts it must appear a veritable haven of refuge to the little waifs that are rescued from the streets or out of the clutches of the inhuman monsters they call father and mother.

In a room set apart for the purpose is a collection of straps, whips, bludgeons, knives and chains, an assortment worthy of a chamber of horrors, yet each one has been taken from the hands of some fiend in human form, and bears a history that seems almost improbable in this city of homes. A heavy chain, thirty inches long and weighing from four to six pounds, with links strong enough to secure some wild beast, was taken from around the neck of a frail little boy, whose case had been reported to the society by outsiders, who heard the child's cries at the torture inflicted. His little sister, frightened at the terrible punishment, attempted to escape by crawling under the table. The inhuman father ceased from beating the boy and turned his attention to the little girl. He dragged her out by the arm, then holding her by the ankles he thumped her head up and down on the floor until the child became unconscious. When the officers of the society arrived at the house it was discovered that the child's wrists and ankles were broken and she had to be at once removed to the hospital.

AN INHUMAN MOTHER.

Another case in which a woman and a mother figures is one of the most heartless instances on record. A long, cruel knife elicited the history, and for cool, hard hearted indifference it has no equal. A woman with her three children, living in one of the worst sections down town, revelled in all sorts of vice and wickedness and regarded her little ones as obstacles standing in her way. Of a very excitable and ungovernable disposition at all times, she was, when under the influence of drink, a veritable fury, and had frequently beaten them with heavy clubs, bludgeons of wood with protruding nails, and, in fact, anything she could lay her hands on, until their bodies and faces were in the most fearful condition.

Not content with this, she turned them out in the streets one bitter winter's day insufficiently clad, and too terror stricken to attempt to return. Neighbors saw them and warned her that unless she speedily gave them shelter complaint would be made against her. Owing to this threat she took them in, but only to vent redoubled fury on the already half dead children. That night one little chap, worn out with the trials of his lot and exhausted by lack of food and ill treatment, fell into a sleep only to be rudely awakened by heavy blows because he breathed too loud. The final act which brought her before the magistrate was that of stabbing her little girl because she asked for a piece of sugar. On being brought up for examination she expressed no regret for what she had done, but said she hoped the child would die, as it would only take fifteen dollars to bury her, and she would be through with "the brat."—Philadelphia Times.

How a Hindoo Uses Clocks.

The Hindoo places a clock in his show-rooms, not because he ever desires to know what the hour is, but because a clock is a foreign curiosity. Instead, therefore, of contenting himself with one good clock, he will perhaps have a dozen in one room. They are signs of his wealth, but they do not add to his comfort, for he is so indifferent to time that he measures it by the number of bamboo lengths the sun has traveled above the horizon.—Temple Bar.

If you want your umbrella, and especially a good silk one, to last twice as long as it otherwise would, always leave it loose, whether in use or not, and dry it open, handle down.

Opium Smuggled Within a Dead Body.

A remarkable smuggling story is related by a reliable resident of National City, Cal. According to the story a corpse was brought across the line from Mexico, ostensibly to be shipped to relatives in San Francisco. It was not examined very closely, as the mourners would have resented too close an inspection of the dead body, but the informant happened to be there and his curiosity was aroused. He therefore investigated.

No sooner was the solemn procession well away from the line than it changed its course, and instead of going toward San Diego went rapidly toward the east, climbed the hills until it reached Otay mesa, and stopped at a house where the coffin was taken in. It was by this time growing dark, and the person who was following it was puzzled how to continue his investigations. He rode boldly up to the corral and put up his horse. The occupants of the house were too busy to notice his arrival. He then walked to the house and looked through the window cautiously. He saw the whole crowd of mourners busily engaged in taking out small tin boxes of opium from the cadaver and piling them on the table. The observer, feeling that he already knew too much for his own good, and fearful of detection, went quietly to the corral, saddled his broncho and departed.

He knows the names of the parties, but will not disclose them. He said, however, that the procession was composed of Mexicans, but the house where the supposed corpse was taken belonged to an American.—Cor. Portland Oregonian.

A Parentless Nest Full.

The passengers on the 7:20 western bound passenger train of the Pennsylvania railroad Friday evening had their hearts moved by a most touching sight. Huddled together in two of the train seats, facing one another, were eight little children, the eldest not yet in her teens and the youngest a tiny babe, which opened its eyes to the light on Christmas day. These poor little ones were all brothers and sisters, but fatherless and motherless, left adrift thus early in their lives without a single relative, save one in far off India, whither they were bound.

The birth of the little babe Christmas morn had proven the death of its mother. The anguish stricken father, a poor mechanic named Robert Graham, turned from the sad bedside a heartbroken man. His sense of the overwhelming responsibility thus imposed upon him combined with his great grief to prostrate him, and from the severe fever which ensued he never recovered. New Year's day his silent remains were borne to the graveyard and laid to rest beside those of his wife.

But for the charity of a kind hearted neighbor the eight little orphans must have fared very ill in their lonely state. This neighbor learned of the whereabouts of the relative in India, corresponded with him and left with the little ones last Friday.—Philadelphia Record.

Built His Own Church.

The new Hovey Avenue Baptist church building is a handsome one, for which its pastor, J. C. Jacob, is entirely responsible. A year ago he began to agitate the building of the structure, but meeting only with rebuffs he decided to go ahead with the reconstruction. Accordingly he begged the lumber from prominent firms of the city, and with his own hands laid the foundations and erected the superstructure. Six days out of seven for nearly six months past he has toiled early and late on the structure. With his own hands he has painted the entire building, and his own ingenuity is responsible for the beautiful interior finish of butternut, sycamore and black ash. Though the property as it stands is worth nearly $5,000, the cash outlay by the church has been less than $1,000.—Muskegon (Mich.) Cor. Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Brave Pilot.

Captain John Stout, a Mississippi pilot, died recently in New Orleans. His life was distinguished by several acts of bravery. He was at the wheel of the steamer Robert E. Lee when she was burned at Yucatan plantation, in 1882. On that occasion he saved a score of lives by remaining at the wheel and holding his boat to the bank. He remained on the blazing vessel until the very last moment, and only escaped by sliding down the log chain. Captain Stout was on board the steamboat J. W. White when she was burned above Bayou Sara in 1886, and jumped overboard to escape the flames. He was picked up almost lifeless.—Philadelphia Ledger.

When the Men Were Saved.

A small Victoria trading sloop was water logged, her mast having fallen through her bottom, in a recent blow off Cape Flattery, Wash. Some Indians went off to the boat, but refused to take the men off until they agreed to give the Indians all the contents of the sloop, which they did, and the red men then towed her into Cape Seal. The Port Angeles Tribune calls the Indians along that coast regular freebooter sharks.

A Seven-Year-Old Hero.

Des Moines has a veritable hero seven years old, named John Green. The four-year-old daughter of Senator Lewis was playing in a neighboring yard, and while crossing a cistern the boards broke and dropped her into seven feet of water, ten feet from the top. Green was near and plunged in after her and held himself and child above water until help came, which was not for fifteen minutes.—Exchange.

The Interest on Twenty Dollars.

The first book issued by the Institution for Savings in Newport, Mass., on the first day the bank was opened! April 3, 1836, and still in the possession of the family of the depositor, was received at the banking rooms recently to have the interest added. The original deposit was twenty dollars, and no more deposits were made. The interest to date amounted to $308.—New York Press.
