OVER $35,000,000 of the $48,000,000 involved in the river and harbor bill goes to the south. That is why over two-thirds of the democrats in the house voted for it.

A FEW years ago wire nails were so dear farmers could not afford to use them, but now, under protection, they have fallen in price until they are sold for less than the tariff on the imported article, and consumers get home-made nails which are not only low in price, but the best in quality of any made in the world.

THE public debt of the United States has been paid during the last ten years at the rate of $100,000,000 per year. The greatest proportion has been paid during President Harrison's term, the surplus revenues being used to buy bonds of the government in the open markets. During President Cleveland's term this was allowed to accumulate in the hands of favored banks and made a bugaboo of to help pass the Mills bill reducing the tariff.—Indianola (Ia.) Herald.

REPRESENTATIVE HARTER of Ohio, who also boldly says: "I am a democrat," has other fears than free silver and a protective tariff. Listen to him: "The great danger to the democratic party is that she will marry herself to a few individuals, many of them like Mr. Hill, utterly unworthy to be consorted with, and she will divorce herself from the eternal principles of liberty and political equality, and equal rights for all men with special privileges for none."

THE democratic free binding-twine bill was too great a sham and swindle even for the tariff reform stomach of the New York Times. That muzzump journal usually hails with joy each and every reduction of protective duties, but the so-called free binding-twine bill was such a transparent piece of electioneering humbug that it had to draw the line on it. The bill represented stupidity that was not to be applauded even in the name of tariff reform. The Times was compelled to say: "The removal of the insignificant duty on binding twine could be of no service to the western farmers, whom the majority of the members are supposed to have in mind. That duty is only seven-tenths of a cent per pound. The removal of it would not perceptibly reduce the price of binding twine."

THE MISSISSIPPI FLOODS.

"The Maker of the Universe never created but one thing which he could not control," said the distinguished orator, Sergeant L. Prentiss, "and that was the Mississippi river. He made it, turned it loose, and let it rip." This graphic view is practically confirmed by the annual floods like the one that is now devastating the southern portion of the country. The situation is worse in some respects than has been known for several years, and the result must be a loss of property and an interruption of industry that will seriously retard the prosperity and welfare of thousands of citizens. It seems to be impossible to provide adequate and reliable means of protection against these terrible disasters. The great river has a way of turning the calculations of science to mockery, and brushing aside the most formidable defenses that engineering skill has yet been able to devise. There are contingencies in its scheme of operations that can not be foreseen. The experience of one year is not always a safe guide for the next one, owing to the intervention of new sources of danger and new methods of attack and destruction. Those who live in the districts subject to overflow are never certain that they be permitted to raise a crop or to remain in their homes. They are at the mercy of a force that may ruin them in a day, and their efforts to avert the calamity count for little or nothing as a general rule.

It is insisted by those who are best acquainted with the condition of the problem that the levee system is the only feasible plan of protection; but it proves to be a disappointment when put to a severe test. New breaks occur every year at points where perfect security had previously been felt, and it is by no means sure that any form of embankment will resist the flood under all circumstances. A large amount of money has been expended in the construction of such works, and competent engineers have declared the most important of them to be impregnable, but the river still repeats its disasters year after year in spite of all such appliances. Possibly the system would be effective if the expenditure had been larger. There is a good deal of force in the suggestion that it is not to be expected that defenses erected at a few points will stand the strain of such a volume of water as the Mississippi now contains when other points are left unprotected. That is to say, a levee system of a local sort does not give assurance of safety because it takes account only of immediate facts, when in reality the distant considerations are the governing ones. If the whole country adjoining the river from St. Louis to New Orleans could be provided with levees, these annual inundations would probably be prevented. The cost of such a system would be enormous, of course, but the interests involved are also enormous, and the necessary outlay could be justified as easily as some others that have been made from time to time under the general welfare clause of the constitution. It is certain, at any rate, that the task of protecting the fertile and valuable lands along the river against the floods that are now so damaging to their owners should be assumed by the government, and that the work should be done in a comprehensive and practical manner.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Doorplates Out of Fashion.

How completely the doorplate has gone out of fashion. When I came to New York to work for a living, a doorplate was as essential an insignia of gentility as a bank account, and shops where they were sold were to be found everywhere. On the residence streets of the better class, at a certain hour every morning, you would see a servant on every stoop, polishing the plate up before its owner had his breakfast. The doorplate was with us what the marble front step is to a Philadelphian. Philadelphia's front steps are there yet.

Our doorplates have become things of the past, found only on old fashioned houses without pretensions to style. Their places have probably been taken by the coats of arms which fashionable New York now pays a Frenchman to invent or borrow for it, and which make the titled visiting foreigner rub his eyes when he finds his own crest over the door of a Wall street man of unknown origin or a railroad magnate of no origin at all.—New York Cor. Pittsburg Bulletin.

Destitute.

"What be you after now, Sam'l Payson?" inquired a brisk and thrifty Vermont farmer of a shiftless neighbor, who came shuffling across the barnyard one morning with as much of a business-like air as he was able to assume.

"I jest wanted t' know," replied the amiable Sam'l, with his usual vacillating smile; "I'm tryin' t' fix th' place up a little, 'gainst some visitors we're go'g comin', an I jest wanted t' know if so be t' you'd give me an empty barr'l o' flour t' make a hencoop t' put a pig in; for I ain't got nothin' at all 't put nothin' at all into!"—Youth's Companion.

Tropical Fruits in the United States.

There are now more than 500,000 almond trees actually bearing in the United States; there are hundreds of thousands of bearing cocconut trees; there are more than 250,000 olive trees, producing fruit equal to the best Mediterranean varieties; there are now more than 500,000 bearing banana plants, 200,000 bearing lemon trees, 4,000,000 orange trees and 21,000,000 pineapples, and the value of tropical and semitropical fruits grown under the American flag is nearly $20,000,000.—Yankee Blade.
