According to the census of 1890, Chicago takes rank, by virtue of her population of 1,068,576 people, as the eighth largest city on the globe. Most of us desire, at one time or another, to visit a city in which so many persons find homes, and, when we do, we can find no better line than the "Burlington Route." Three fast and comfortable trains daily. For further information address the agent of the company at this place, or write to J. Francis, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Omaha, Nebraska.

Mr. Van Pelt, editor of the Craig, Mo., Meteor, went to a drug store at Hillsdale, Iowa, and asked the physician in attendance to give him a dose of something for cholera morbus and looseness of the bowels. He says: "I felt so much better the next morning that I concluded to call on the physician and get him to fix me up a supply of the medicine. I was surprised when he handed me a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He said he prescribed it regularly in his practice and found it the best he could get or prepare. I can testify to its efficiency in my case at all events." For sale by F. G. Fricke & Co.

July Days.

Softly drone the honey bees;
Blossom scented in the breeze;
Golden is the grain,
Over all the fairest breeze.
Rests, and song birds pipe their lays
In a sweeter strain.
From the meadows come the scent
Of the new hay, clover blend—
In the topaz sky
Fleecy clouds, like ships at sea,
Floating on ward lazily,
Or at anchor, lie.

Nature now is doubly dear
To my soul, for doubly near
At July's best,
She has come, and coming brings
Surcease from all weary things—
Blessful sense of rest!

Whistler's Frank Criticism.

A Paris letter says that Whistler seriously criticised one of Dannat's pictures in a Paris art exhibition a week or so ago, and the next day a mutual friend mischievously introduced the two men. Meantime the censorious expressions of the former had been widely repeated. "Glad to meet you, Mr. Whistler," Dannat is reported as having said, "particularly glad at this moment, as I hear you have been running down my pictures behind my back."
"Yes," returned the adept in the gentle art of making enemies; "I did say something rather harsh about it, and it was behind your back, as I never before had the pleasure of seeing you face to face."
"Now that I do see you, I will do you the favor to tell you the contribution you have sent to this salon has no business here. This is a collection of pictures, and you should be informed that half a dozen figures outlined on a wall do not constitute a picture. Something of intelligent composition, some attempt to represent an idea, some respect for the truths of nature are prime requisites, and your flat drawing over there does not embody any of these qualities. Good morning, Mr. Dannat!"

A Marvel in Book Publishing.

A curious book, in which the text is neither written nor printed, but woven, has lately been published in Lyons. It is made of silk, and was published in twenty-five parts. Each part consists of two leaves, so that the entire volume contains only fifty leaves, inscribed with the service of the mass and several prayers. Both the letters and the border are in black silk on a white background. —Boston Globe.

A REMARKABLE JUMP

AN INCIDENT IN THE LIFE OF THE EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA.

Her Horse Took the Bit Between His Teeth and Made a Terrible Run—An Almost Miraculous Leap Over an Open Drawbridge—A Plucky Woman.

Many years ago I was an eyewitness to an accident which befell the empress of Austria, and which was so terrible that her escape from death seems to me even now a miracle.

Elizabeth of Austria, as she liked to call herself, was at that time not only the most daring but also the best rider in the world. No man or woman ever knew better how to take an obstacle than this most charming of all crowned women. Though her majesty was then already a grandmother, on horseback she could give odds to the best Hungarian and English riders. The party at the event of which I am writing consisted of the empress and a large number of Austrian and foreign gentlemen riders, who seemed to have gathered together from all parts of Europe. Most of them were known as prominent horsemen. This was not surprising considering that the empress would never take the field in company of poor riders.

On this occasion the empress rode a very spirited young horse, which she had obtained in Lancashire when on a visit to England, and to the training of which she had personally attended for nearly a year. Everything went well after the start until we crossed a highway leading to a small Hungarian country town a short distance off. Passing a white painted milestone the empress' horse shied, and suddenly becoming uncontrollable it dashed down the road in the direction of the town. From appearance it was evident that the animal had succeeded in taking the bit between his teeth and that no earthly power could stop it on its mad runaway.

Although we all followed the empress, none of us seemed to gain upon her. Flying we passed through the little town, much to the amazement and the terror of the few people in the streets. A short distance beyond the town was a shipping canal, and to our horror we saw that the drawbridge spanning the canal was open so as to permit the passage of some boat. In a moment we realized that the empress was running straight into the jaws of certain death.

Faster and faster we went on in pursuit, but faster and faster also seemed the empress' horse to fly. Now it had reached the open bridge. Would it stop? Before we had time to think we saw the animal dash up the incline of the open bridge like a flash of lightning. For a moment we could not but close our eyes and a shudder convulsed every man in the cavalcade. It was a terrible moment—a moment during which fear and horror alternately kept us mercilessly in their pangs. When we opened our eyes again, still riding as fast as our horses could go, the fair rider and her runaway had disappeared.

We had no doubt that the inevitable had happened and that Elizabeth of Austria was drowned in the slow and turbid waters of the canal.

The idea was a terrible one. My pen is too weak to describe the confusion among us and the agony of suspense that followed and seemed to make each rider quiver in his saddle. Almost unconsciously we had stopped our horses just before reaching the incline to the open draw. As a matter of fact our excitement was so great that we did not even notice that one of our number, Count Szepany, if I remember well, was also missing. All our faculties naturally had followed the empress only.

There we were, halting before that terrible bridge like a pack of cowards, with nobody among us plucky enough to ride into death with an empress.

A few seconds later the inclines of the bridge were lowered again, but nobody of our company seemed to even attempt to pass it.

From the pangs of fear and horror we had passed into those of amazement. Several hundred yards beyond the bridge we beheld riding toward us a lady on a foaming steed. It was the empress, and at her side the only gallant man of the crowd, Count Szepany. Her majesty firmly sat her horse, and appeared as cool and collected as if nothing had happened.

Smilingly did she make fun of us and our anxiety. Her fine raillery was just as much justified as it was inoffensive when she saw the pitiable figure we cut in her exalted presence.

The empress' horse was very lame, and closer examination showed that it had dislocated its right hind fetlock. In jumping the open draw between the wings of the bridge the hind feet of the empress' horse had caught one of the iron rails at the edge and torn off one of its hind shoes. The most extraordinary feature of the accident was how the horse ever could have gone down the incline without breaking its own and the rider's neck. The only explanation for this small miracle, however, might be found in the fact that the empress never lost her presence of mind for a minute when on horseback, and that, though the animal was uncontrollable, she must have sat it to perfection. With regard to Count Szepany, he was unable to give any account of his escape. Moreover, he did not even remember whether his horse made the jump before or after the empress'. He simply said that during the jump he closed his eyes for a second, and that he then experienced a sensation as though the water were bubbling over his head.—Harper's Young People.

A Scythe as Old as Moses.

An Egyptian scythe, dug up on the banks of the Nile in 1890, is exhibited among the antiquities in the private museum of Flinders Petrie, London. The shaft of the instrument is of wood set with a row of fine flint saws, which are securely cemented in a groove. This discovery answers the oft asked question, How did the stone age man harvest his crops?—St. Louis Republic.

Bathing Suits Are Shorter.

Bathing suits will be worn shorter this year. This may appear startling to the fair sex, but as it is intended solely for the man of fashion, with whom I believe myself on "speaking terms," the shock in the first sentence must be forgiven, as it was altogether unintentional.

But in saying that bathing suits will be worn shorter, I have reference only to the lower half. Last year they covered many an ungainly knee. This year they can be worn cut to just above the knee or just below, and the shape of a man's limbs will have much to do with his choice. As a man is never an excellent judge of his own physique, it might be well to ask a friend for advice.

Bathing suits will be worn as tight as ever. This is another bit of agreeable information for the host of well shaped men who enjoy the two or three months in the year during which they can disport themselves on the sands of Manhattan Beach, Long Branch, Newport and Atlantic City. But society permits this show of shape, in fact enjoys it, and so the man of fashion has simply to bow obedience and pose.

When you buy your bathing outfit this year be sure and do it properly. Buy them in one piece of worsted or silk, and if you are stout get vertical stripes, and if you are thin follow the Sing Sing design. That is very much in style this year.—Boston Herald.

Treatment of the Czar's Consumptive Son.

The Grand Duke George, the czar's second son, who ever since his enforced return through illness from his Indian tour has been under medical treatment for pulmonary disease, has been passing the winter at Abbas-Tuman in the Caucasus. A private letter from that place states that his imperial highness is undergoing a most remarkable course of treatment. The walls in his apartments are bare and unpapered, the furniture is of plain wood or cane without upholstery or stuff covering of any kind, and his bed consists only of the thinnest of mattresses. Throughout the winter only a very moderate fire has been kept up, while the windows of the grand duke's rooms have been continuously open.

His attendants have suffered dreadfully from the cold, but his medical advisers hold that this low temperature is very beneficial to their imperial patient, as it tends to destroy the bacillus and prevent the formation of tubercle. They maintain that the progress of the disease has been arrested, and express hopes that if the treatment which they prescribe is persevered with, the grand duke will in two years' time have completely recovered.—Fall Mall Gazette.

A New Way to Catch Fish.

Mr. David Pickle, of the Cuba district, Blakely, Ga., has a new mode of catching fish. The plan is this: The fish are baited for some days with a mixture of flour and magnetized steel filings made into stiff paste or dough. When they begin to take the bait a magnetized iron or steel rod, coated with the same kind of paste, is let down to them. They soon attempt to suck the paste from it, and in doing so stick hard and fast.

It is not unusual for Mr. Pickle to haul out at one time a long string or rod of suckers in this way. This plan of fishing, combined with Mr. Cal Odum's method of frightening or setting fire to the fur of raccoons and burning them out of the highest trees with roman candles, is bound to revolutionize hunting and fishing in this section.—Atlanta Constitution.

An Equine Ostrich.

D. F. Barrett has a horse that is both herbivorous and carnivorous. That is to say, it not only eats corn, oats, hay and other things that equines should, but it devours rags, nails, scrap iron, barbed wire, etc., with a relish. Friday its queer stomach hankered after meat, and Dave had a hen and chickens running in the yard, and that horse gulped down seven of the little chickens quicker than a wink and smacked its lips for more. The horse is in good condition, is sound as a dollar, was raised in the far off state of Washington, and, aside from its strange appetite and peculiar gastronomic stomach, is all right.—Ladonia (Mo.) Herald.

Having False Teeth Pulled.

Going twelve miles to have a set of false teeth pulled and being obliged to take gas in order to undergo the operation is something new in the dental line, but it was the experience of a Kennebec county woman the other day. The teeth were new and were such a snug fit that she couldn't get them out. After enduring the discomfort for two days she went to Augusta for relief, and by the time she reached there her mouth was so sore as to make the taking of gas necessary.—Lewiston Journal.

A bill is to be introduced into the next session of the Pennsylvania legislature for the creation of forest reservations at the headwaters of principal rivers.
